From the Palace to the Chapel.

The bridegroom's party emerged first and proceeded along the winding, massive granite corridors to the chapel, being followed by the bride's cortege from the Queen Regent's apartments. Their places were respectively to the right and bridegroom stopped at the steps leading to the altar and there knelt, thus remaining throughout the mass, which was said by Cardinal Sancha, archbishop of Valladolid; Cardinal Herrera, archbishop of Santiago de Compostella, and Cardinal Casana, bishop of Barcelona. Also attending were the bishop of Mardid, the bishop chaplain of the Place de Sion, and several other prelates, church dignitaries and cardinals, whose places were within what might be termed the presbytery. The mass celebrated was low mass, there being no singing, though the organ performed solemn sacred selections, including one written for the occasion by Zubicurre.

The Catholic Ritual

The Catholic Ritual.

After the mass the simple Catholic ritual of marriage was read, the ceremony not differing in any detail from that uniting the most humble members of that faith, except that the ritual was read from a specially-printed book in Spanish. Wedding rings were exchanged by both parties, these of course being of great value and unique workmanship.

Another custom observed was that of giving coins to the bride by the bride groom. These may be pennies or silver, or gold coins, according to the position and wealth of the contracting parties, but they must always number thirteen. These employed today were thirteen gold coins, each weighing an ounce and being of the coinage bearing the bust of Felipe, the first Spanish Bourbon monarch. They were the same used at the wedding of Queen Isabel II., the grandmother of the bride.

After the conclusion of the simple wedding service, the cardinal primate pronounced a short discourse, exhorting the wife to love and obey her husband, and the husband to love and cherish his wife, adding: "I give thee a companion, not a slave."

The cardinal also made reference to the virtues of the ancestors of the bride and groom and pointed out the obligations the prince and princess were under to give a good example to those in an inferior station of life, and then bestowed the papal and his own benediction.

Return to Queen Regent's Apartments.

Return to Queen Regent's Apartments
Arm in arm, the newly-wedded couple arose and left the chapel, followed by a single cortege, the two family parties merging into one, instead of leaving separately, as they had entered. They traversed the long corridors to the apartments of the Queen Regent, where a record of the marriage was entered in a special civil register, the royal family and the same witnesses signing who signed the wedding contract on Tuesday.

This ceremony ended, all repaired to the state dining room in which the betrothal ball was held Monday evening and partook of a wedding breakfast.

The princess and the now prince of the Asturias will occupy apartments in the palace. It is not intended that they shall take a wedding journey at present. Tonight the Count and Countess Caserta and most of the wedding guests will leave the city.

night the Count and Countess Caserta and most of the wedding guests will leave the city.

The chapel in which the ceremony was held is located in the north wing of the palace. It is rotunda-shaped with the nave opening on the main gallery of the palace and running about the inner court. Ordinarily it will seat about 150 persons, but today every available inch of space was occupied in order to accommodate the invited guests. Though the skylights would have afforded ample light, they were covered with heavy yellow hangings, through which the sunlight was unable to penetrate except in yellow gleams, which added to the somber appearance that the massive style of architecture already gave to the chapel. Sixteen tall columns of gray marble support the domed roof. Color was lent to the scene by a red Brussels carpet, which covered the entire floor to the foot of the star, where to the right, entering from the gallery of Dames, the wall was decorated with frescoes of the Holy Trinity and the tutelary saints of Spain by Geacinto, while the altar is an "Annunciation," painted by Raphael during his later days.

The prefect of Valencia telegraphs that grave disorders took place there yesterday. A collision between gendarmes and the populace occurred, in the course of which several shots were fired, one person being killed and another wounded.

At Malaga, several French priests on their way to Brazil landed to see the town. A mob hooted at and threatened the priests, who hastily re-embarked. The mob then stoned the office of the Clerical papers. A policeman was wounded by a revolver shot. The prefect eventually succeeded in re-establishing order. reinforced.

As the bride and bridegroom knelt upon cushions touching the steps of the altar, a white, satin-bordered veil, three yards long and half a yard wide, was spread over the head and shoulders of the bride, reaching over the shoulders of the groom, but leaving his head uncovered, while, according to the Spanish custom, a white satin ribbon, called a yoke, was tied about the necks of the couple, the knot being made between them signifying their union.

Serious Riots at Santander.

Disturbances in the provinces are also taking on an added seriousness. At Santander thousands of rioters attacked several convents, the bishop's palace, and the Jesuits' establishments and forced an entry into the Carmelite convent, where they looted everything and set fire to the building. The gendarmes arrived in time to extinguish the flames before much damage was done, but they had to fire a volley in the air and charge the mob in order to save the Carmelite monastery, from which the monks had fled in terror. The rioters fired several shots in reply, and then marched through the streets.

When passing Carlists' houses the occupants poured water on the heads of the gels and made a threatening demonstra-tion today in front of the Jesuit college. The police charged and dispersed the riot-

Chief Anderson was the oldest fireman in the city, having begun service as a torchboy in the old volunteer department when he was but 15 years old. Then he was a bucketboy, and when the town got fire hose he was made a hoseman. Before the department had horses of its own, Anderson rented the three he owned for nearly five years. During most of this time he was on the department rolls as driver. Counting in his boyhood service he spent twelve years in the service before he concluded to let somebody else have a chance at glory. But the old longing could not be resisted and eleven years ago he again entered the service as a driver. In six years he had become captain under Chief Ryan and six months later he was promoted to be chief, which position he held for the past five years.

A special meeting of the common council will be held this evening and it is expected that arrangements will be made for a public funeral for the dead fire chief.

He was the Echo.

When we had climbed to the top of the mountain, we observed an old man sitting on a rock with a pair of field-glasses in his hands. Every now and then he would look earnestly through them and then whoop continuously for a time with a vigor astonishing, considering his age. For a time we observed him from a respectful distance, till finally, being naturally curious, I went up to him. "Why," I asked. "do you rubber that way and then yello so hard?"

He turned and eyed me calmly, with a dignity which could have been born of nothing but a great responsibility.

"If you talk to me," he said gravely, "you'll take my attention and I'll lose my job. I, sir, am the Echo at the Mountain house down yonder."

At this point it became necessary for him to howl again, and I retired much impressed.—Princeton Tiger.

amendments. Bills were introduced as follows: Appropriating $5000 to Robert S. Houston in payment for cattle killed by the state veterinarian; amending the statutes relative to costs; amending the statutes relative to powers of town meetings; providing for a tax on dogs in towns and villages, not to exceed $2 for males or $5 for females; amending the statutes relative to collection of taxes on timber lands; providing that receipts of towns from sale of swamp lands shall go into the general funds.

In the Senate on the 14th the memorial to Congress for an amendment to the constitution to enable senators to be elected by the people was concurred in, without debate. A report was submitted from the commissioners of public lands, in compliance with a resolution sdopted, on moneys due to Sauk and Columbia counties from sale of indemnity lands, and an old claim which has been presented at several sessions of the Legislature. The commissioners atte that it does not appear from the books, files or records that any money is due Sauk or Columbia counties, or any other county of the state, on account of sales of indemnity lands. Among the bills introduced were the following: Amending the laws relative to compulsory education, to require that children be sent to school until they are 14 instead of 13, and imposing a penalty on parents for violation; requiring reports from the Milwaukee police department as to purchases of second-hand goods; conferring upon the Dane county supervisors the right to appropriate money for permanent improvements on the county fair grounds; amending the statutes relative to township school boards so as to limit the secretary's compensation to 100 days a year, at $2 to $3 a day, and providing the members of the executive committee may receive $2 per day for twenty-five days's service a year when the board so decides; amending the law dividing cities into classes by reducing the requirement for cities of the second class from 40,000 to 30,000 population.

of Whitewater was concurred in by a rising vote.

After a hard struggle the Assembly on the 14th ordered to a third reading Mr. Lenroot's joint resolution for a constitutional amendment permitting cities to increase their bonded indebtedness from 5 to 10 per cent. for the purpose of purchasing street railway, electric lighting plants and waterworks, one of the most important measures before the Legislature. The resolution provoked the liveliest and longest debate of the session, so far. A very large number of important bills were introduced in the Assembly. One by Mr. Spratt is designed to prevent competition between convict and free labor. It provides that the same industry shall not be conducted he say two of the penal institutions of the state. Mr. Smalley introduced a bill to change the form of the official ballot to avoid any doubt about the voter's intention. Mr. Miller introduced a bill to pay Alfred Cook of Marathon county $1750 for his expenses in the contest over his seat. A bill by Mr. Barker, forbids the

Have you the grip? Or, rather, has the trip got you? Grip is well named. The briginal French term, la grippe, has been shortened by the busy American to read "grip," Without intending to do so a new word has been coined that exactly describes the case. As if some hideous giant with awful GRIP had clutched us in its fatal clasp. Men, women, children, whole towns and cities are caught in the baneful grip of a terrible monster.

The children went home together, the little maiden in her gauzy summer frock and her yellow hair whipping her face as the breezes came over the moors. She gave her hand to the "nicest boy she had ever seen," in dripping jacket and kilt, who carried her "parolsol" in his hand along with his blue bonnet like the courteous knight he was. He was a ragged cavalier, but shining from his bath in the burn and with his face full of light.

"And where do you come from, nice boy?" said the little girl.
"I cam' last frae Miss Fraser's cottage, but I bide wi' my 'gran' at Drumquhat," said Walter, plainly. "And I've a dowg—my word, but I'll gie him a lickin' he'll mind when I get him, "an' I hae ten cats—an' their names are Tam, an' Jim, an' Bob, an' Ben, an' Specklie—but Specklie's an awfu' thief." This with an accent of pride.
"How is that?" asked the little girl, much interested.
"Weel," said Walter, warming to one friends. He laid a hand fearlessly on each as they came romping up. At once the dogs fell a-whimpering, and fawned on the bleeding boy as he lay down on the grass among their feet with his face looking skywards. The orchard gates stood open and on their posts there was also the scutcheon and the motto. An old man, small and spare, with keen, cold eyes, came through the apple trees, and looked down on the boy, who took off his cap and tried to rise, while the hounds whined and licked the blood from his face with moist and gleery sympathy.

menhir, lay for half a mile across the heather. On the sunny sue of this landmark the red rays fell on a bare and curly head, on which the dew sparkles just as it does on the yellowish gray bent upon which it is pillowed. Apparently the flaxen fleece which covers it is a sufficient protection, for the boy has taken his bonnet off and covered his feet with it. He lies curled up like a collie sleeping in the sun. He continues to sleep quietly and soundly with the undisturbed repose of childhood till the dew dies from off the heath and from the angles of sunny hair.

He remembers with regret the time when he was allowed a penny for each lozen of "laid away" eggs that he found, a practice in which his "gran" encouraged him till she found that as the average of "found" nests—that is, of nests made by hens in the fields for secret proofing purposes—increased, the number of eggs in the legitimate nests diminished. Breakfast being over so quickly, the lost boy tramped away over the moor, sure that he must come out somewhere. He was as merry as the larks that were singing above him. He hallooed at the plovers. Once he saw a sheep and pretended it was an elephant

Walter Anderson was not alarmed, but his eyes dilated, for he had never been spoken to in this manner before. He dropped his little friend's hand, as unwilling to be a disgrace to her, a hand which that young lady instantly regained possession of.

Then he looked up steadily at the angry face of the dark-browed, gray-haired woman who stood threateningly with her hands on her hips at the corner of the house, and he said:

"I come frae Drumquhat, an' my name s Walter Anderson." But the straightforward answer seemed only to enrage the woman more, for she came forward towards the pair, with her hand uplifted to strike, and her tongue running free like wildfire across the lift.

Caused Him to be Misunderstood.

In his memoirs of Lord John Russell, Justin McCarthy thus describes him in the Saturday Evening Post:

"Russell never obtained much personal popularity as a statesman or a leader of party. During a great part of his more recent career it was often his fortune to be a rival of Lord Palmerston; and Palmerston had the happy art of winning people over by his easy, genial manners, his exuberant and almost boyish good nature, and the cheery familiarity which could put up with even the most tiresome of bores and send him away in the confident belief that he had made quite an impression on the great Prime Minister. Russell's manners were somewhat cold and distant, and he seemed to be always guarding himself against the approaches of a stranger.

"I believe from what I have been told." THE BABIES IN THE WOOD.

The June nights are merciful in Galloway, and it was not long before a broad bar of light lay across the eastern hills which shut out the plains of the Dee and the long glen of the Ken. The pale sea-green lingering in the west had not yet faded into ashy gray when the eastern sky began to flame. The clouds in the east through which the sun rose were leave and against the sun rose were leaved and the ling above the tame excellence of many "hoose cats." "Weel, Specklie is an oot-bye cat, ye see, an' he thinks that 'hoose cats' should bide in the hoose," said Walter, who also believed in a place for everything and everything in its place. "Specklie comes oot first to meet me when I come back frae the schule!"

"Ay, that do I." said Walter, who had been once or twice without very notable effects in the way of education. He did not enter into statistics. "Specklie is a good cat; he was the first to come an' meet me when I cam' hame; but noo the hale ten come, an' that's the only time that Specklie'll no' touch a hoose cat. Na, he kens better."

"How does Specklie come to meet you?" asks his companion.

"I get to the tap o' the Craigs fornent the hoose, an' there I stan' an' cry, 'Tissy wissy,' tissy wissy,' till every cat aboot the place rins oot to meet me. "How splendid! I shall come and live with you!" broke in his companion, enthusiastically.

"Ye'll hae to speak to 'gran' aboot that," said Walter, who had his own notions as to who was head of the house at Drumquhat. There was a silence for some moments as the children went along the birch-shaded way hand in hand—no thought of inequality having apparently come between them.

"What is your name, nice boy?" suddenly asked the curls, shaking themselves briskly.

"They ca' me Walter Anderson," said Walter, succincily; "but ye can ca' me that he was in reality a man of deep emotions and strong affections, but he was shy and nervous in his intercourse was shy and nervous in his intercourse with strangers, and people often regarded him as distant and haughty when he was only diffident and modest. I was honored with the friendship of his widow, the late Countess Russell, during many years and up to the close of that singularly noble and exalted life, and I learned much, by my acquaintance with her and other members of her family that was not known to the outer world in general about the real nature and chargeneral about the real nature and char-acter of her illustrious husband."

sleeping in the sun. He continues to sleep quietly and soundly with the undisturbed repose of childhood till the dew dies from off the heath and from the angles of sunny hair.

At last he awakens, uncoils himself like a lithe young animal, starts to find himself under the greater canopy of heaven; and with a shake of his kilt and a toss of his head, he rises, having completed his toilet for the day. He has no fear now that there is the broad light of day on the moors. He thinks that it would not be such a bad thing to be lost on the hills if only plates of porridg were distributed at suitable distances. A pewit stoops toward him with a condescending dip and a flirt of the wings. He resents this, saying to himself, "Foolish bird, to think to take me in!" and moves along in his own way, like a ranging greyhound, along the bare tops of the peat islands. The pewit flutters a broken wing, drops almost at his feet, but he does not even cast a tolerant eye on her best performances. There, at last, upon a bare place where the bent has been flattened, he finds what he has been seking crook of the elbow which shows the "Shoo! Go and lay other two!" says the boy, unfeelingly. "Any hen could do more than that."

He remembers with regret the time when he was allowed a penny for each dozen of "laid away" eggs that he found, a practice in which his "gran" encouraged him till she found that as the average of "found" nests—that is, of nests made by hens in the fields for secret brooding purposes—increased, the number of eggs in the legitimate nests di-Cincinnati, O., Feb. 11, 1901.—(Special.)—Miss Netta Hixon is sergeant-atarms of Camp No. 1, Patriotic Order of America. Her home is at No. 1717 Hughes street, this city. She is a very popular and influential lady. For three years she has been ill. Now she is well. She says: "I cannot praise Dodd's Kidney Pills too highly for what they have done for me. I was troubled for three years with weakness, and often had dizzy spells, so that I dared not go out alone. My head would ache continually for four or five days at a time, until life became simply a burden.
"All the medicine I took did me no good, until my physician advised me to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. I secured a box, and soon found that my headache was leaving me. I felt encouraged and kept on taking them and getting stronger. The pains gradually diminished, until I had used four boxes, and all trace of pain had gone. I am to-day a strong and well woman, thanks to Dodd's Kidney Pills. If the price was one dollar per pill, instead of 50c a box, they would be cheap compared with other so-called medicines placed before a suffering public." This is but a sample of the letters received every day by the hundred. They all tell the same story of sickness and soreness, changed into health and vigor by the use of Dodd's Kidney Pills. They never fail. 50c a box, six boxes for $2.50. Buy them from your local druggist if you can. If he can't supply you, send to the Dodds Medicine Co., Buffalo. N. Y.

slope of a winding woodland path, through which the afternoon sun drove lances of mellow light. The plain front of a considerable mansion shone through the green haze of the beech leaves a few hundred yards ahead of them. Walter looked eagerly at it, for he had never seen so large a house. It had a couple of turrets with curious narrow windows, something like the slits in the Drumquuhat barn, and a white square tower rose from the center. Walter noticed that there was no glass in the highest windows, or in the narrow slits of the towanother form. No matter; it is by adding bit to bit that the idea finally grows solid in the little one's mind.
