A Weak Stomach

Indigestion is often caused by over-eating. An eminent authority says the harm done thus exceeds that from the excessive use of alcohol. Eat all the good food you want but don't over-load the stomach. A weak stomach may refuse to digest what you eat. Then you need a good digestant like Kodol, which digests your food with out the stomach's aid. This rest and the wholesome tonic Kodol contains soon restore health. Dieting unnecessary. Kodol quickly relieves the feeling of fullness and bloating from which some people suffer after meals. Absolutely cures indigestion.

EAGLE HOTEL. JOSEPH SCHMIDT, Prop'r. THEDFORD'S BLACK-DRAUGHT. A good medicine for liver disease.

Mrs. Rosa Adams, niece of the late General Roger Hanson, C. S. A., wants every woman to know of the wonders accomplished by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I cannot tell you with pen and ink what good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for me, suffering from the ill peculiar to the sex, extreme lassitude and that all gone feeling. I would rise from my bed in the morning feeling more tired than when I went to bed, but before I had used two bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, I began to feel the buoyancy of my younger days returning, because regular, could do more work and not feel tired than I had ever been able to do before, so I continued to use it until I was restored to perfect health. It is indeed a boon to sick women and I heartily recommend it. Yours very truly, Mrs. ROSA ADAMS, 819 12th St., Louisville, Ky.

Any woman who are troubled with irregular or painful menstruation, weakness, leucorrhoea, displacement or ulceration of the womb, that bearing-down feeling, inflammation of the ovaries, backache, general debility, and nervous prostration, should know there is one tried and true remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. No other medicine for women has received such wide-spread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine has such a record of female cures.

DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I am very pleased to read Mrs. Adams' account of the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for her. I have been a sufferer for years. It was the only medicine which was at all beneficial, and within a week after I started to use it, there was a great change in my feelings and looks. I used it for a little over three months, and at the end of that time I suffered no pain at the menstrual period, nor was I troubled with those distressing pains which compelled me to go to bed, and I have not had a headache since. This is nearly a year ago. I always keep a bottle on hand, and use it when I feel a headache coming on. I find that it tones up the system and keeps me feeling strong, and I never have that tired grand feeling. I certainly think that every woman ought to try this grand medicine. Yours very truly, Miss ELIZABETH DANFORTH, 203 De Soto St., Memphis, Tenn.

DECEIT.

CHAPTER III. The trees waved leafless in an icy wind under a leaden winter sky, and Hildred turned shivering from the gloomy prospect to the warmth of the pine-fed German stove, and the welcome glow of color on a large unfinished canvas in her studio.

"I shall have a good long day at painting," she thought, turning the easel to catch a better light, and touching mahogany sticks and brushes lovingly. "There is nothing to tempt me away from it on such a gruesome day," and Herr Frost says I am growing fat."

Resolved to merit the reproach no longer, she sat down to work, and did not even turn her head to see if the door when a rustle of silk announced Miss Freda's entrance.

So she knew nothing of the pink flush of nervousness that fluttered in her cheeks, and that all gone feeling, which she spoke with a little tremor.

"Hildred, I have had a letter from England, dear."

"From Mr. Mundy, of course! Well, auntie, has he made up his mind to come and see us yet?"

"No—that is not just yet, I think. But Hildred, someone else, and not your friend, you remember, Mr. Richard Random?"

The news was of less importance than the piling up of grey storm-laden clouds on the red gold of her "Winter Sunset," and Hildred went on with her work, politely indifferent.

"Oh, indeed? He comes on his own business, I suppose, not as a substitute this time?" she asked, her head thrown back, her eyes critically narrowed for inspection of her work.

"Oh, indeed? He comes on his own business, I suppose, not as a substitute this time?" she asked, her head thrown back, her eyes critically narrowed for inspection of her work.

"Ah, those I suppose, we shall hear news from him of that very neglectful guardian of mine."

"Oh, Hildred—neglectful! when he writes to you so regularly and so charmingly."

"And declines so persistently to see me! Never mind, auntie, he cannot refuse to meet me in April, and if he does not improve on acquaintance, I will not see him."

"Of course he will improve," you mean, you will find him everything that is desirable. In the meantime, Mr. Random will call on us tomorrow afternoon, and you will be kind to him, won't you, dear?"

"That means asking him to lunch, doesn't it? Very well, auntie, I will remember."

"Ah, I didn't mean that, child! I want you to treat him as a friend, to—to—in short, be kind to him."

"Well, and how can one possibly be kinder to an Englishman than by asking him to lunch, if it is in his power, yes, of course, it is dinner, with port wine and beef. Well, choose the day, and give the invitation yourself, auntie, and then we will concert the means together."

A pair of mischief-lit gray eyes had looked up from the easel for a moment, and now the question settled, turned again to her regular work.

But Griff seemed only half convinced, and his hostess presently found an excuse to break up the objectionable tete-a-tete, and make the conversation general.

It was late when Griff left, having stretched his visit to the utmost limits of politeness for the sake of outstaying the professor.

Two weeks passed, weeks during which Richard Random managed to enjoy himself thoroughly. The weather was bright and frosty, and favorable for walking, and he found that his walks generally happened to be Hildred's, too.

That afternoon he went to give Hildred her lesson in the big three-windowed room over the studio, which she had fixed up as a studio.

"Watching the flying fish in the Gulf of Mexico is one of the favorite pastimes of persons who make the voyage across the gulf for the first time," said an observant man.

"During a trip recently we ran into great schools of them between Vera Cruz and Acapulco, and it was difficult not to believe at times that they were simply man-eating fish."

"Hildred opened wide eyes of astonishment. "Oh, you meant, I thought you meant to be specially nice to me," she said, "and surely it is a mark of esteem to get such a man as the professor to meet him."

"Ah, those I suppose, we shall hear news from him of that very neglectful guardian of mine."

"Oh, Hildred—neglectful! when he writes to you so regularly and so charmingly."

"And declines so persistently to see me! Never mind, auntie, he cannot refuse to meet me in April, and if he does not improve on acquaintance, I will not see him."

"Of course he will improve," you mean, you will find him everything that is desirable. In the meantime, Mr. Random will call on us tomorrow afternoon, and you will be kind to him, won't you, dear?"

"That means asking him to lunch, doesn't it? Very well, auntie, I will remember."

"Ah, I didn't mean that, child! I want you to treat him as a friend, to—to—in short, be kind to him."

"Well, and how can one possibly be kinder to an Englishman than by asking him to lunch, if it is in his power, yes, of course, it is dinner, with port wine and beef. Well, choose the day, and give the invitation yourself, auntie, and then we will concert the means together."

A pair of mischief-lit gray eyes had looked up from the easel for a moment, and now the question settled, turned again to her regular work.

"Oh, indeed? He comes on his own business, I suppose, not as a substitute this time?" she asked, her head thrown back, her eyes critically narrowed for inspection of her work.
