Better be safe than sorry.

Especially when the safe way costs no more than the other.

If we were to print a picture of a watch in this paper, would you feel entirely safe in buying from the picture without calling at the store to examine it?

Not likely?

Then why follow that plan with the catalogue houses?

And even if they permitted you to see the watch before you bought, you aren't supposed to be a watch expert, are you?

Better be safe than sorry.

Have Your Tires Re-Set

A. A. PERSCHBACHER'S Blacksmith Shop WITH THE Gold-Set Tire Setter.

The Machine that Does it Right.

The great utility of this machine consists in the saving of time, labor and expense, and we set forth the following advantages over the old way of setting tires: No tires are taken off. No bolts are taken out and thrown away. Any degree of slack can be put in the wheel. Four tires can be set in one-half hour's time. No burning or marrying of felloes. No spalling of wheels by welding the tires too tight. It does far more work than can be done by taking the tire off. No boring of the felloe for new bolt holes.

CHINA'S GREAT SEAL.

Scranton Man Says He Has It and China Doesn't Want It Back.

Col. Boies of Scranton, Pa., says he has the Great Seal of the Empire of China.

He was in Pekin at the time of the Boxer uprising. One day a doctor who was walking along the street saw a coolie brandishing a big metal object.

Attracted by the fine workmanship of the object, he bought it for a few yen, without knowing what it was.

The coolie put it into his trunk with the other Chinese souvenirs he had gathered and brought it home.

He wrote to the Chinese minister at Washington, telling him about the find and offering to return the seal, without reward, to the Chinese government.

The minister replied that the seal was polluted and that the coolie should keep it.

PATRICA'S HUSBAND.

By the Author of "Pamela's Confession," "Olivia's Temptation," "An Irish Rebel," "Brooke, Y. C.," "Deceivers Ever," etc.

CHAPTER I. "You know I can't help seeing that it isn't fair to you, Pat. I am standing in your light."

The pretty soft color in Patricia Drummond's cheeks faded a little and her brown eyes were very wistful as she glanced at the fat man in faultless evening dress who was standing before her.

"You mean—?" she said helplessly. "That everything between us must end. Don't you see, Pat, that—"

For a moment everything—the gayly-dressed folk who were sauntering backwards and forwards before the terrace—was forgotten. Patricia had a sudden glimpse of the handsome face that she had learned to love—swayed and then whirled round before Patricia's eyes.

For a moment the girl thought that she was going to faint, then with supreme effort she called her woman's pride to her aid and rose to her feet.

"Certainly it will be best," she agreed, in her languid, mutual tones. "I quite agree with you, Sir Wilfred. I had thought of telling you so tonight. But, you see—"

She smiled—with a slight bitter smile—"you have forestalled me."

"Sir Wilfred Stonor did not get at me from one foot to the other unawares."

"Of course I knew that you saw it in the same light as I did," he said, smiling over his conscience by the recollection of her words, as the moon emerged from behind a passing cloud, and by its clear light caught a glimpse of the girl's white face. "It was an impossible situation, you know; the only thing was to speak and end it."

Patricia glanced away from the good-looking, restless face.

"Quite the only thing," she acquiesced tonelessly.

Stonor glanced at her sharply; he knew well enough that he was behaving like a cad, that nine out of ten women who had approached him, made a scene—that Patricia was treating him with unbecoming reserve, that she was trying to blame him. He asked himself this savagely as he watched the girl's fair, proud face. If destiny had been kind to them, if Patricia had not been married to Drummond, as it was—she shrugged his shoulders.

"We can still be friends, Pat," he ventured to say. "Dear, you know I shall always be your friend."

The girl turned slowly and he shrank beneath the contempt in her great brown eyes.

"That is the usual thing to say, is it not?" she inquired disdainfully. "But, oh, yes, Sir Wilfred, if our paths cross in the future we shall be friends, no doubt!"

With a scornful emphasis, "No, now there is nothing that should like to ask you, may I? Then—as he made a slight gesture of assent—"who is the woman?"

"That woman! What do you mean?" she asked.

"I mean the woman you are going to marry. Oh—as he was about to offer her his ready, quiet, unobtrusive hand, she said, "I assure you, Sir Wilfred, there have been reports—some of them have reached me—"

She stopped, her cheek twitched, her mouth felt hot and dry, and her soft hands clenched themselves convulsively.

For a moment her self-possession even deserted Stonor; his sudden face lighted a little.

"Upon my word, you are taking it like a sensible girl, Patricia. You say you have heard."

"Of Mrs. Wilford—yes! She is your choice, then?" Patricia remarked, with a hard little laugh. "The widow of a wealthy American, is she not? A sporting woman—runs race horses or something? Rumor does not lie when it credits you with intentions in that quarter, I presume."

Stonor began to fear that his vainglorious "she is rich" he said, his blue eyes wandering over every detail of the pretty, scornful face of the girl beside him, as he mentally contrasted it with the high color, the coarse features of the woman who tomorrow would be his opening acknowledged fiancée. "I have no money, you know—it is you I am thinking of much more than myself in this matter, Pat. Should be a brute to tie you down to the lot that would be mine if I married a portionless bride."

"Well, well, after there may be some mistake. There's many a slip, you know, Drummond. Remember, you cannot say anything to me until that certificate comes from America. It is all right—"

"It will be difficult to avoid throwing a little extra respect for the prospective millionaire into the bargain," Lord Drummond remarked, with an easy laugh; "for I feel convinced there is no mistake. I remember the circumstances of my mother's marriage, and I would not admit of that. She was the beauty of the season."

"He will be the catch of the season," Daveman went on, half-ironically. "When he has had some drilling—yes!" Lord Drummond said. "I shall have to show him the ropes a little, I expect. But—"

Their voices grew more indistinct, quite evidently they were moving away, Patricia stole forth, and unobserved, crossed the terrace and slipped into the small, dark, and very comfortable room.

As she walked quickly towards the ball-room she caught sight of herself in one of the mirrors that lined the walls, and started for a moment as her white face and the loosened masses of her heavy hair met her eye; but a few touches here and there brought her to her usual appearance of aristocratic disorder.

Just outside the doorway she encountered one of her deserted partners.

"Why, Miss Drummond, this is too bad!" Stonor said reproachfully. "The last waltz was ours, and I searched for you in vain."

"I am very sorry, Mr. Guildroy," Patricia said, with a pretty smile at him. "I had a bad headache, and have been resting. You must forgive me."

"Oh! If you have a headache," the young man began commiseratingly, "I have a happy thought—you look quite fit now; won't you give me the next?"

Patricia glanced mechanically at her partner, as she was about to reply, when she was just striking up Stonor's property. The fact that he had not chosen to wait for it was in itself an additional aggravation. With a quiet, unobtrusive assent she laid her hand on Guildroy's arm, and in a moment more they were whirling round the room.

"I am glad I stayed for this," her partner remarked jubilantly in the first pause. "Hitherto he had been one of the most humble of Patricia's devoted admirers, and she had been very kind to him, and smiles were upon his face. Under the influence his shyness was rapidly melting away, and Patricia smiled approval of his most daring speech. "I was thinking of going to Lady Daveman's ball; but now—"

Patricia's smile became mechanical.

Happy Solution. "My dear," said the bridegroom on the day after he had returned from their wedding journey, "I have a suggestion to make that will be very kind to our mutual satisfaction and benefit."

"Now, John, darling," said the bride, preparing to kiss him, "I am just off."

"Remember, I never said I could cook!" "Don't worry; it isn't about your cooking," he said, "it's about your writing and me to mail. It strikes me that we might be happier—"

"I didn't write to you, John, now."

"Wait until I have finished my dear. All I want to suggest is that you mail your letters to me, so that I can never forget them, and in return for"

"A very big affair, is it not?" she said. "I have heard of several people going on from here."

"I dare say," Guildroy returned indifferently. "Lady Donaldson fills her house with Americans—always—that is the worst of it!" he added.

"Mrs. Wilford is going, I know," Patricia went on recklessly. "She is very rich, is she not?"

"Two hundred thousand, they say." The words haunted Patricia like a refrain. Two hundred thousand, in a distant doorway he caught sight of Lord Drummond still in close conversation with Sir Alan Daveman.

Who was the lucky man of whom they were talking? She wondered. They recalled the name they had mentioned—Justin Heriot Forman; it had an odd sense of familiarity, but, as she would, she was not able to place it.

Then, as she was glancing carelessly round the room, while Guildroy, somewhat chagrined at her distant air, was waiting for her to speak, she caught his wandering attentions, the fragment of a sentence from a group of men caught her ear.

"See—money, of course; but it is true enough. I take Stonor with it just now, and, though he hummed and hawed and asked me how I had heard it, he did not attempt to deny it. Two hundred thousand—"

Patricia put her hand to her throat; it was strange how the mention of that sum, the price of Stonor's dishonor, seemed to her so familiar.

With a feeling that she could bear no more she turned, and, heedless of Guildroy's astonished face, crossed the room to the door by which she had just entered.

"I am tired, Cousin Mary," she said brusquely. "I—I think I will wait in the dressing room until you are ready to go."

Drummond's cheeks; she looked at the girl with a gleam of dislike in her cold blue eyes.

"As you please," she remarked indifferently. "I knew that you were moping, and I understood that you do not make a scene, Patricia."

One glance at the sneering face and the girl that was her secret was guessed. She raised her head.

"I don't think I quite grasp your meaning," she remarked, wrinkling up her forehead in a puzzled way. "But you have changed my mind—I will wait until you are ready, Cousin Mary."

And as the other laughed mockingly she turned and looked at her with a pretty capricious smile.

"The next, is that yours also?" "If you will give it me," responded Guildroy, overjoyed by this unexpected gratification of the ever changing relations in human affairs.

Change in Name Only. There was a christening yesterday at the gray limestone mansion of Surgeon-General Sir John Lubbock, M.P., Public Health and Marine Hospital Service.

In reality it was a rechristening, the victim of the disease being a no less able bodied citizen than the yellow fever mosquito, heretofore known in refined society as the "Yellow Fever Mosquito."

The change of name, however, does not bring about any change of function in the language of a Marine Hospital Service.

CHILDREN SHOWED IT. Effect of Their Warm Drink in the Morning. "A year ago I was a wreck from coffee drinking and was on the point of giving up my position in the school room because of nervousness."

"I was telling a friend about it and she said, 'We drink nothing at meal time but Postum Food Coffee, and it is such a comfort to have something warm to enjoy drinking with the children.'"

"I was astonished that she would allow the children to drink any kind of coffee, but she said Postum was the most healthful drink in the world for the children as well as for older ones, and that the condition of both the children and adults showed that to be a fact."

"My first trial was a failure. The cook boiled it four or five minutes and it tasted so flat that I was in despair but determined to give it one more trial. This time we followed the directions, and in five minutes after the boiling began, it was a decided success and I was completely won by its rich delicious flavor. In a short time I noticed a decided improvement in my condition and kept growing better and better month after month, until now I am perfectly healthy, and do my work in the school room with ease and pleasure. I would not return to the nerve-destrucing regular coffee for any more."

The president gets $2000 a year, the chief engineer eight experts averaging $900 each and thirty clerks and fifty assistants have an average monthly wage of $15. All the principal machinery appears to be English and German makes, except the electric cranes, which are American makes, as also is a fair share of the minor machinery. SORES AS BIG AS PENNIES. Whole Neck and Head Covered—It All Came Out—Cured in Three Weeks by Cuticura.

"After having the measles my whole head and neck were covered with scaly sores about as large as a penny. They were just as thick as they could be. My hair all came out. I let the trouble run along, taking the doctor's blood remedies and rubbing on salve, but it did not seem to get any better. It stayed that way for about six months; then I got a set of the Cuticura Remedies, and in about a week I noticed a big difference, and in three weeks it was well entirely and I have not had the trouble any more, and as this was seven years ago, I consider myself cured. Mrs. Henry Porter, Albion, Neb., Aug. 25, 1906."

Change in Name Only. There was a christening yesterday at the gray limestone mansion of Surgeon-General Sir John Lubbock, M.P., Public Health and Marine Hospital Service.

In reality it was a rechristening, the victim of the disease being a no less able bodied citizen than the yellow fever mosquito, heretofore known in refined society as the "Yellow Fever Mosquito."

The change of name, however, does not bring about any change of function in the language of a Marine Hospital Service.

Autos for War Service. The French war department is engaged in buying a large number of automobiles which may be regarded as available in case of war.

All Records Beat. A non-stop run of 712 miles from Paris to Nice has just been accomplished by a motor car.

Traveling Vice President. Adlai Stevenson, one of the two living vice-presidents, puts in most of his time traveling about the country visiting places, cities and towns in the territory in the south.

Spencer Memorial Barred. The dean of Westminster has refused to give a room in the abbey to a memorial dedicated to Herbert Spencer in honor of the ground that he was not orthodox in his Christian belief.

CHILDREN SHOWED IT. Effect of Their Warm Drink in the Morning. "A year ago I was a wreck from coffee drinking and was on the point of giving up my position in the school room because of nervousness."

"I was telling a friend about it and she said, 'We drink nothing at meal time but Postum Food Coffee, and it is such a comfort to have something warm to enjoy drinking with the children.'"

"I was astonished that she would allow the children to drink any kind of coffee, but she said Postum was the most healthful drink in the world for the children as well as for older ones, and that the condition of both the children and adults showed that to be a fact."

"My first trial was a failure. The cook boiled it four or five minutes and it tasted so flat that I was in despair but determined to give it one more trial. This time we followed the directions, and in five minutes after the boiling began, it was a decided success and I was completely won by its rich delicious flavor. In a short time I noticed a decided improvement in my condition and kept growing better and better month after month, until now I am perfectly healthy, and do my work in the school room with ease and pleasure. I would not return to the nerve-destrucing regular coffee for any more."

ENGLISH BOYS TODAY.

Fear That They Are "Degenerating Into Unintelligent Animalism."

Ninety per cent. of our school boys are being educated to present a flawless smoothness of mental surface; very soon they will show an equally monotonous sameness of physical build. Now, what is the outcome of all this unending constraint on a lad's character? There is reason to suppose that its effect is one of compression on the mind; as regards its result on the disposition, it is necessary to speak with caution. It is perhaps impossible to estimate the average characteristics of the average product of our athletic school system, but, broadly speaking, such a boy may be described as an incoherent burlesque for his existence in a continuous languor about, he is naturally impatient with anything that is not his own, and his own robust being, is intolerant of anything purely literary or artistic, fronts with contempt (thanks to the precept and example of his directors) all "non-sportsmen," and when he has reached sixth form status, confines his literary studies out of school hours to certain gay weeklies and one or two "masculine" monthlies. He has a fluent command of language which is not English, is apt to be rough in manner, and is by no means free from the moralists' call of viciousness.

On the other hand, he is not without some good qualities—totally undisciplined straight-forwardness arising in part from his steady obedience to the sporting maxims of "fair play" and in part from his usual want of mental depth; he shows in his quieter moments a patronizing contempt for his weaker brethren, and now and then there peep out traits of character which tell us that, given a proper training, he might not have made his life necessarily rotate round a center of muscle unaffected by other and more important influences.

In fact, there is every sign that many of our boys are degenerating into an uneducated animalism.—Westminster Review.
