The only discordant note was struck by the Social Democrats, who remained in the committee room during the reading of the Emperor's greeting and entered the main hall only when it was necessary to sign the oath. The Constitutional Democrats showed no marked enthusiasm in singing the national hymn or in the cheering, but otherwise they participated decorously in the proceedings.

One of the most remarkable experiences in the long career of Admiral Lyon occurred at the time of the terrible hurricane disaster at Samoa in 1889. Admiral Lyon, then a captain, was in comman of the Nipsic, one of the American warships that suffered damage in the storm. The Nipsic was blown from her anchorage onto the beach, but was eventually hauled off with great difficulty, with her keel, rudder and rudder post gone and her hull leaking badly. Her screw was badly twisted. Despite all of these troubles Capt. Lyon took the ship safely to Honolulu, 3300 miles distant, and had her repaired, there being no chance to have the work properly done elsewhere. It was a most remarkable feat and for it the captain received the thanks of the navy department.

J. P. Morgan Willing to Put Through Deal with Aid of Washington-No Profit to Importers.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.-For several days reports have been in circulation that certain banking interests are engaged in negotiations for the purpose of securing a large amount of gold direct from the timated that political questions were involved in the negotiations, particularly with reference to some preferential tariff agreement. From authoritative sources is learned that the effort to secure French gold direct was made by the banking house of J. P. Morgan & Co.

At the first intimation of impending financial trouble a representative of the Morgan house was sent to Paris for this Morgan house was sent to Paris for this purpose. The Bank of France intimated its willingness to send to this country $20,000,000 gold, but it desired some form of commuttal from this government in so large a transaction. Communication with Washington was at once begun and still continues in the effect to gun and still continues in the effort to find some method by which the trans-action can be completed. It is probable, however, that even in event the Washington officials cannot see their way to participation in the matter, the gold will be brought over.

Collateral doubtless can be given until the exports to France cover the amount when the advance would be met by bills of exchange on Paris. It is said that no profit whatever will result to the importers of the gold, but that on the contrary the transaction will mean a loss and that it is undertaken solely as a public spirited measure of relief for the existing stringency.

Stranded in this far away settlement, their plight seemed more unfortunate than ever. "What shall we do now?" asked Willett, and his young companion could not answer satisfactorily.

Trip Over Andes. With no personal belongings except the clothes they stood in and only a few shillings in money they were in a bad fix. The natives at Antofogasta said fix. The natives at Antofogasta said that ships came along some times once in two or three months, but nothing was sure; the nachorage was so bad that all skippers shunned the place. The stranded Americans barely had money for tobacco and had to live as best they could. One day Willett saw a map of South America in a store. He noticed that the continent was comparatively narrow in the latitude of Antofogasta and that almost directly across on the Atlantic side. most directly across on the Atlantic side was Buenos Ayres, the great port of Argentina, where ships were arriving and departing all the time. There were the great Andes intervening, an apparthe great Andes intervening, an appar-ently insurmountable barrier. Willett was struck with the idea that he and Miller might reach Buenos Ayres. They inquired as to various distances of the neighborhood and found that Buneos

Ayres was over 1000 miles away.

They learned that the mountain passes were feasible, and late in August they started from Autofogasta. The first 200 miles were made in ten days, but this was with the help of ox teams from various inland ranches. Then the long climb up the mountains began, and they were compelled to depend on what scanty food they could find and what the natives gave them. According to Willett, the Indians treated them well and always accorded them food and shelter willingly.

· Climb Above Snow Line. The flimsy clothing worn by the tramping men was not much of a protection. and they suffered from the cold in the high altitudes. They were above the snow line at times, and then had to keep hustling in order not to freeze. After crossing the summit and descending about fifty miles the men reached the boundary line between Chile and Argentina. Here they found a little town, Mendoza, the terminal point of a railroad that in time was to cross into Chile. The railroad men gave each of Chile. The railroad men gave each of the Americans a pair of shoes and a blanket. From Mendoza, too, they rode a goodly distance toward Buenos Ayres on a construction train that bumped and lurched down the mountains. They they reached the more fertile country of the lowlands, and again at times found teams to help them along.

In late September they arrived in Buenos Ayres, wearing big hats and with blankets across their shoulders like good South Americans. They went, of course, to the American consul, who got them a chance to work their way to New York on the ship Honduras.

Among these atten-tion has recently been called to a tree tion has recently been called to a tree named the karite, which abounds in French West Africa, and is found even as far east as the sources of the Nile. It produces eatable fruit, containing hard shelled seeds, which are filled with a fatty substance, used by the natives as butter. The tree does not grow in forests, but in open, park-like expanses, and in gardens. In addition to the fatty substance of the seeds, which, it is thought, may find uses in commerce, the sap of the karite coagulates into a kind of gum, not resembling rubber, but which, nevertheless may prove of importance.—Youth's Companion.

I may have almost forgotten the way.

The material welfare that has come out of eight years of abundance is easily outlined. It is expressed in a catalogue of cancelled mortgages, new dwellings, refunded bonds, swollen bank deposits and improved belongings.

In some sections the transformation has been marvelous. For instance, in So Sybil put on her hat and a light coat, for though it was October the weather was as warm as it is in June, ant she walked slowly down to the Strand. It was here she first saw the man who was to influence her life. Two years ago! She was a careless child then, and now she was a woman. It seemed two centuries ago instead of two short years. She stopped typing several times and watched the blazing fire. When the door opened at 4 o'clock the girl had only just reached the bottom of the first page. Rats Great Cannibals.

It is estimated that the rat does $50, 000,000 worth of damage a year in Eng land. In a slaughter house near Paris rats in a single night picked to the bone the carcasses of thirty-five horses. There is very little that they will not eat. Eggs, young birds and animals are among the dainties which they snap up in the ordinary course of business, but when press ed by hunger they will eat anythin through which they can drive their rible teeth. Rat will eat rat. The idea that a trapped rat will bite off an im prisoned leg and so escape is now said to be wrong; it is the other rats which do the biting. They eat the captive.

Value of Imported Produce. Consul F. W. Mahin of Nottingham eports that the value of refrigerated oduce annually imported into Great Britain is now close to $200,000,000, about half of which comes from the British colonies. The United States and South America each contribute some $30,000,000 worth, Russia about $13,000,000 worth, the remainder being discounted among several countries. The tributed among several countries. The greatest value is of butter and cheese, about $75,000,000. Beef is next, nearly $50,000,000; mutton, $30,000,000; egg over $10,000,000.

Now Use Glass Blackboards. An innovation at the College of the City of New York in its new home on St. Nicholas heights is the use of glass blackboards. What is written on a glass blackboard may be read from any angle except from behind it, as Dr. Basker-ville, professor of chemistry, explained to his students. When a blackboard ceases to be a wall slate, then what will it become? Evidently a new word must
