DEATH OF J. T. VAN VECHTEN

First White Settler of Kewaskum Passed Away at His Home in Wauwatosa last Saturday Morning, Aged 85 Years.

Jacob T. Van Vechten, one of the first white settlers of the town of Kewaskum, died at his home in Wauwatosa, one of the suburbs of Milwaukee where he has lived for nearly twenty years, on Saturday, February 15th, 1908.

Born of Dutch ancestry May 8th, 1823, in the old town of Catskill, New York, he grew to manhood with the influences of the majestic Hudson on the one hand and those of storied mountains on the other, and in his quiet life in later years there was manifest a sterling worth of character that emulated the grandeur of both.

For some time he served on one of the boats operated by Commodore Vanderbilt then plying on the Hudson River, but in 1846 he caught the Western Fever, and, starting out along the Erie Canal, he made his way from place to place until he reached the lakes, then on to Detroit, and, after spending some time in Michigan, he came to Milwaukee, and on August 17th, he located a "Government Claim" on the southwest quarter of section seventeen in the present town of Kewaskum. Later in the same fall, he, with a man named Samuel Brown, leaving the beaten path a little west of the present site of Young America, blazed and cut their way to the east shore of Cedar Lake, then northward to their claims, and came in with an ox team, the first to hew their way into the heart of the unbroken forest and build their cabins.

The Indian village, two miles north of the claim, with its Chief, Kewaskum, whose name at Mr. Van Vechten's suggestion the town now bears, was still in existence, and the red men for some years to come were frequent visitors at his door.

He was one of the first supervisors of his town, and used to tell with amusement, how, at an early date when the County Board refused to build a bridge across a creek on one of the main roads in his township, he secured a large appropriation than that at first asked with which to build a bridge across "a branch of the Milwaukee River," this being thought more important than a bridge over "Schneider's Creek," although they were one and the same thing.

In the summer and fall of 1850 Mr. Van Vechten erected a story and a half log house, eighteen by twenty-eight feet, a large dwelling for the woods in those days, and it is still standing, and to it on February 2nd, 1851, he took his bride, Miss Elizabeth Bancroft, daughter of Thaddeus Bancroft, the first Register of Deeds of Waukesha county, then living at Menominee Falls. Here they reared their family, eight children having been born to them, but in the spring of 1888 they retired from active life to make their home in Wauwatosa. There Mrs. Van Vechten died on October 30th, 1895.

Up to less than three and one-half years ago Mr. Van Vechten had enjoyed excellent health, and in his eightieth year, going by the way of New Orleans, he spent the winter and spring in California, returning by the way of Portland, Salt Lake City and Denver, enjoying at this advanced age, the beauties of that country which had been the Eldorado of the minor's dreams in 1848, and whether he would then have gone but for an attempt to "jump his claim."

About Christmas time in 1904 he was taken with the grippe, and, though he rallied for a time and has been around the house, walking about and even travelled some, he never recovered. Nearly four weeks ago he took to his bed, and, excepting for a day or two did not leave it again. He died early Saturday morning, three of his children being with him, and was buried from the home on Monday afternoon at 2:30, Rev. Geo. W. White, a former pastor of the Kewaskum church, officiating at the service at which all of the members of the immediate family and many old friends and neighbors were present.

Mr. Van Vechten is survived by six of his eight children, Mrs. Eva Lehmann and Mrs. Sarah Douglas of Neosho, Wis.; Mrs. Anna Stewart of Troy, La.; Mrs. Etta Gage of Pierre, S. D.; Miss Elizabeth Van Vechten who lived with and faithfully cared for her father during his long illness, and Edwin F. Van Vechten of Milwaukee, and unto these have been given seventeen living grandchildren.

Only those of us who remember Mr. Van Vechten as he lived among us, and those of his family who were still closer to his generous heart, know the manner of man he was; the honest neighbor, loving father and faithful friend; or can fully appreciate his loss.

One by one the human hand marks of our early civilization have passed away—they are nearly all gone now—yet Providence decreed that this man, among the first of all to plant himself in this community, should be the last to go.

A man of many virtues and not a single vice; of wonderful purity and strength of character. In his humble way he rounded out a life of nearly four score years and five. Truly it may be said of him that like the granite of the hills, he withstood the test of time where lesser rocks—even his sturdy type—crumbled away.
