Harvesting in California. Very much different than in the Middle West. (By William Henry Forbes.) Farming is carried on in a very different way in the golden west than in Wisconsin and the Mississippi valley and the Great Lakes region. The tools are somewhat different and the machines used vary a great deal from those used in the east. In Indiana and Ohio the left hand plow is used exclusively, while in Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota and all of the great prairie states the right hand plow finds favor. In California however the plow is only used in orchard cultivation and preparing soil for gardening or for sugar-beet cultivation. The small farmer or rancher uses the plow somewhat, but on the great wheat and barley fields, gang plows or cultivators are used. Many of these turn four to eight furrows, while some turn four to sixteen or even twenty furrows. One teamster or mule-skinner usually drives from two to twelve horses or mules according to the size of the implement or the load. A few large ranchers use the steam plow instead of horse-power. Harvesting is now on in the San Joaquin valley, and it is a fine sight to see the operation. The grain is straight and a very beautiful color, but very short, as there has been a great dearth of rain here. Harvesting here is certainly different than in the east. The headers used are usually twenty-four feet in width. These are hitched to the side of a threshing machine and the grain drops into the self feeder and is threshed and separated just as well as with the stationary separator. The straw drops out into the stubble field and is usually burned later in the season. Such a threshing outfit is not practical in the eastern states where the grain crinkles before it becomes thoroughly ripe, but in the arid west where rain very seldom moistens the rancher the grain will stand for days and even weeks until harvested. In parts of the valley there will be no crop this year, as the rainfall was too slight to germinate the seed, and in spots they have not had a good crop for years; but when they do get a crop it is such a bumper that they can stand it for several seasons without a crop. Near Hanford in the desert I saw machinery which had not been used for four years. Five years ago they had lots of rain and a bumper crop was the result; since then the ranchers have been waiting and hoping that it may rain again sometime. When the rain comes and the grass starts then the rancher plows his ground and sows his seed, and if he is blessed with an abundant rainfall and the new crop flourishes he buys new machines or repairs his old ones and lives and hopes again. Then when the golden grain is harvested, he sells his ranch and the poor dupe who buys the ranch may starve before he ever gets a bushel of grain or a forkful of alfalfa. There is a great deal of this country which is being reclaimed and irrigated, and makes fine orchards and alfalfa fields; but to irrigate a grain field or a corn field is and will result in failure, because the ground becomes too hard usually for grain and corn to thrive on irrigated ground. So while the farmer does not freeze as he does in the rugged north, he is roasted and starved out in the torrid and parched deserts of the southwest. You farmers of Wisconsin usually get some crops, and though corn may freeze some season, or the potato blight or rot, or the oat blight, or hail and hurricane destroy or tangle part of your products, you are a thousand times more secure than the big ranchers of the west. Even now the hillsides are drying up and soon the rancher must feed his cattle on high-priced baled alfalfa or oat hay shipped from the valleys; so that stock raising is not all profit to the stockman.

Married. The marriage of Miss Clara Raether, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ferdinand Raether, and Oscar Habbeck, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Habbeck of West Bend, was solemnized at the Ev. Lutheran St. Lucas church at 4 o'clock p. m. last Saturday, May 23, 1908, Rev. F. Greve officiating. The bride was attended by her sister, Theresa Raether, as maid of honor, and Meta Habbeck and Emma Stark as bridesmaids. The groomsmen were John Habbeck, Arthur Stark and Louis Habbeck. Esther Raether acted as flower girl and carried a bouquet of violets and tulips and Oscar Bartelt acted as ring bearer. The bride was attired in a white embroidered dress and carried a bouquet of Lillies of the Valley and smilax. The bridesmaids were gowned in white dotted mull and carried bouquets. The bride was given away by her father. After the ceremony the bridal party repaired to the home of the bride's parents where a reception was held with a large number of guests present. Supper was at 5:30 p. m. during which time pleasing music was rendered by Miss Alma Heise. The young couple were the recipients of many beautiful presents. They will make their home on the groom's farm two miles east of Kewaskum. The young couple are well known here and are held in high esteem. The STATESMAN joins with their many friends in wishing them much joy and happiness in their married life. CAMPBELLSPORT. The E. F. U. meets on Wednesday evening. Ed.
