Obituary. The tastes of Marie de' Medici, wife of Henry IV. of France, were splendid, and she indulged them to the full. One of her collars of venetian point was alone "worth the eyes out of a man's head," and she had a fine store of them. Describing her as she arrayed herself on a typical occasion in a costume of carnation satin, M. Baffol, in "The French Court in the Seventeenth Century," continues as follows: "This arranged to her satisfaction, her jewels, of which she has quantities scattered in different cabinets, must not be forgotten nor yet her ring. Her gold bracelets, studded with seventy-two small diamonds, were purchased from Francois le Prestre, jeweler of Paris, for 1,000 livres. Her earrings, two great diamonds surrounded by lesser brilliants, were made by the jeweler, Jean Subtil. Her gold watch, valued at 2,100 livres, is oval in shape and ornamented with several diamonds, and she must not forget to place in her pocket for use at mass the rosary of enameled gold, embellished with diamonds, a trill worth 900 livres. And, thus adorned, the queen must yet perfume herself."

Clearing It Up. "To which is a man more closely related," said the genealogist, "his first divorced wife's second husband or his present wife's first divorced husband?" "So far as I can see, one tie is about as close as the other," said a thoughtful friend.

"So I should say," said the genealogist, "but Billy Bowen must have figured out a difference. Anyhow, when his first wife's second husband died Billy went to a ball game, but when his present wife's first husband died he went into mourning. I can't understand that."

"I can," said the thoughtful friend. "Billy's present wife was on the point of divorcing him so she could remarry her first husband. Now that he is dead she has decided to stick to Billy."

"Ah!" said the genealogist.—New York Press.

Always Waning. A Frenchman who apparently has a good deal of time on his hands has been amusing himself by reckoning up the number of kisses he has given his wife during the first twenty years of his married life.

He finds that in the first year he dispensed about 100 kisses a day, or say, allowing for birthdays and legal and church holidays, about 36,700 in the year.

In the second year this number was reduced by half and in the third year to ten a day, while in the fifth year his better half had to be content with two a day, one in the morning and one in the evening.

What happened in the fifth year is "wrapped in mystery," but at the same rate of "progression" he probably arrived eventually at one kiss on the first of January every leap year.

Freedom of the Press. The battle for a free press in the full modern sense was fought out between 1764 and 1771, beginning with the prosecution of Wilkes for attacking Bute in the North Briton and ending with the successful resistance to the proclamation by which the commons had forbidden the publication of their debates. Six printers who had infringed the proclamation were summoned to the bar of the house. Five obeyed, and the messenger of the house was sent to arrest the sixth. The lord mayor sent the messenger to the house of commons sent the lord mayor to the Tower, but he was released at the next prorogation, and the day on which he left the Tower marked the end of the last attempt to silence the press.—New York American.

The Real Version. Napoleon sat inadvertently upon a smoking cannon and scorched the seat of his white trousers.

"I cannot turn back now," he muttered to an aid as he hastily dismounted. "I have burned my britches behind me."

This historic expression has been grossly corrupted by later writers.—Pathfinder.

The Supreme Test. "You are all right," said the doctor after he had gone through with the regulation thumping and listening with his patient. "Not a trace of heart disease. Fifteen dollars, please."

The patient drew a long breath and remarked: "I am sure now I have no heart disease. If I had, I should have dropped dead when you mentioned your fee."

Fun Missed in Air Traveling. It may be a great achievement for a balloon to travel at the rate of seventy-five miles per hour, but what is the fun in skipping along at that rate when you cannot see the telegraph poles or constables who post things that stand still or go slower.—Boston Advertiser.

Irrigation in the Deserts of the West. (By William Henry Forber.) I am tempted to give the readers of the STATESMAN a little more news from the "wild and woolly west" because I feel that my friends in Wisconsin thoroughly appreciate the truth of conditions as they really present themselves to the visitor from the east. At my last visit to Kewaskum more than a hundred readers of the STATESMAN including the Editor, warmly expressed their appreciation of the articles I have written during the past year. I expect to attend the next Irrigation Congress held at Albuquerque, New Mexico, the latter part of this month and the first week of October. It is estimated that there are now 60,000,000 acres of arid lands which will in time be reclaimed and irrigated. That means seventeen states as large as Delaware or about two states as large as Wisconsin.

When Jules Verne wrote his book "The Man Who Stole the Earth" he created quite a sensation. Now what will you say if I tell you of a set of men who stole a river? Well that is what has been done with a great many rivers in the west; but I am going to tell you about one in particular. Truckee river is the outlet of Lake Tahoe, up in the Sierra Nevada mountains between California and Nevada. It is a very beautiful stream, pure and clear enough to drink, and full of the best trout in the world. But for ages this river has simply sent its water over into the desert of Nevada where it sunk into a slough known as Carson sink.

But a short time ago the U. S. Government sent engineers to the Truckee river and at a cost of $7,000,000 took this river bodily out of its bed by a canal thirty miles long and provided irrigation for 350,000 acres of ground which means about as large a tract as Washington county with Auburn and Ashford added, and then some. This is now the big alfalfa field of Nevada, the only fertile oasis in the state, with the exception of a few townships near Lovelock. In this belt perpetual water rights are sold to settlers at the rate of $4.00 per acre.

I have found farmers who have cut four crops of alfalfa last year, and have received all the way from two tons to ten tons per acre. Last winter alfalfa baled sold at Fallon for $2.00 per ton for new and from $5.00 and upward for stuff two to five years old. This rise in price was due however to the discovery of gold at Rawhide, fifty miles distant, and proved a better thing for the farmers than for the suckers who invested in the new diggings.

The farmer who can irrigate his alfalfa patch or his orchard, enjoys the same sunshine as the people of Wisconsin have enjoyed during the past summer. No storms, no floods, and he never prays for rain. He just opens the sluice gates of the irrigation ditch when he wishes to water his patch and closes it when he has flooded it. Then he is ready to mow another crop of alfalfa after which he repeats the process.

In many states however men have stolen water rights. What do you think of a man so mean who would say: "You can't have a drink, nor your family, nor your horses, sheep, cows, pigs or geese, for I came here first, so all this water is mine and by my coming first and my claiming it, it belongs to me and my family forever. But if you will pay me for this water I will give you a right to drink and a right to water your ground for $3.00 per acre each year." Now what do you think of that? But that is just what is done when this government gives to any individual or corporation an exclusive water-right. You must either pay for your drinks, or move, or thirst and suffer until your resourceful brain contrives a scheme, or until death relieves your pangs of thirst. It is hoped that the next Congress about to convene will correct some of the abuses. The government should hold all water-right as a government resource. This is true of forest reserves and mineral lands and oil lands, quarries and the like. "What all the people must use, all the people should own."

Gray and the Elegg. Thomas Gray kept the elegy by him for nine years before he gave it to the world. He polished away at it all those years as a lapidary polishes a gem, and the result was he made it a gem. In his whole life he wrote comparatively little, and when asked why he had written so little he replied, "Because of the exertion it costs in the labor of composition."

Diverting Attention. "So you favor the suit of that for-eigner?" "Yes," answered Mr. Cumrox. "I think I should rather like to have a man in the family whose English mother and the girls can criticize instead of mine."—Washington Star.

3w "Barney" Potter Dead. Assemblyman B. S. Potter, aged 72 years, died Wednesday morning at 6 o'clock, after an extended illness. He had been a sufferer from kidney and liver trouble for some time, and his death followed an acute attack. His many friends throughout the state.

Barney S. Potter was born in Elba, Genesee county, N. Y., Feb. 3, 1836. He settled in West Bend when a young man 20 years of age, and has made that city his home ever since. On his arrival in West Bend in 1856 he became a clerk in a general store in which capacity he served until 1860, when he engaged in the mercantile business on his own account, selling out in 1878, to go upon the road as a traveling salesman for a wholesale grocery house. In 1883 he engaged in the milling business, and later he engaged in real estate transactions on a large scale, in which he continued until his career was ended by death.

He was always a public spirited citizen of West Bend and was for many years at the head of the advancement association of that place. He also took an active interest in political matters, but it was not until 1884 that he received party recognition. In that year he was selected as a delegate to the Democratic national convention which met in Chicago. He was elected to the assembly from Washington county in 1902, and was again chosen in 1905.

At the special session of the legislature in 1905 he was appointed as one of the assembly members of the committee to investigate the insurance companies doing business in Wisconsin. Mr. Potter leaves a wife. The funeral was held at 10:30 yesterday (Friday) morning.

Met With Bad Accident.

Edward Glander and his 7-year-old son, while returning home from Kewaskum last Monday, met with a bad accident near Ernest Ramthun's place near New Fane when his team became frightened and ran away, throwing Mr. Glander and his son down a twenty foot embankment on the side of the road. Mr. Ramthun heard the commotion at his home and started for the scene where he found the unfortunate man lying unconscious on a pile of stone with his head bruised. He called his neighbors for assistance and removed the injured man to Mr. Ramthun's residence where medical aid was at once summoned. Mr. Glander was removed to his home the following day where he has been in a comatose condition up to Thursday, when he began to recognize people when spoken to, and there are now good hopes for his recovery unless other complications set in. His son escaped with but slight bruises.

OBITUARY. The sad news was received at St. Kilian of the death of Mrs. Wenzel Knar of Stanley, Wis., a former resident of this place but later residing at Stanley. Mrs. Knar took sick in April and has been in poor health ever since. Her condition was getting critical so she decided to go to Milwaukee to a hospital and undergo an operation. On the way she gradually became worse so they left her at a hospital in Marshfield where she died Sept. 15. The funeral took place last Friday from her home at Stanley with services at the St. Anna church and interment in the adjoining cemetery. Deceased was born in Germany in 1848, and came to St. Kilian with her parents when nine years of age. Later she was married to Wenzel Knar, after which they moved onto a farm 1 1/2 mile north east of here where they lived until five years ago. Their union was blessed with 15 children of whom 5 and her husband preceded her in death. Those living are: Jacob of Montana, John of Stanley, Joe and Willie of Lomira, Mrs. Andrew Flasch of St. Kilian, Mrs. Nick Beck and Mrs. Adam Kahut of Milwaukee, Johanna, Frances and Irma at home. Mrs. Knar was well known at St. Kilian and was highly respected by a large circle of friends who mourn her departure.
