with Great Difficulty and Are Utterly Exhausted.

TWO GASBAGS ARE STILL MISSING.

BERLIN, Oct. 15 .- The German balloon Busley came down yesterday morning at 5 o'clock in the North sea. The two men on board were rescued by a passing steamer.

This news was received in a telegram from Edinburgh and caused the greatest relief, for there was great anxiety regarding the fate of this airship. The Busley is one of the twenty-three balloons that started in the race for the international trophy last Sunday from a suburb of Berlin, and now every one of the contestants has been accounted for. There are still, however, two baland the Heresell, which started out Monday in the endurance test.

must be removed! Through a sleepless night the furies of conscience and memory tormented the mind of John Bradbury, till, when morning glowed upon the bare peak above the gully and he departed for the mines to meet the sub-manager and his visitors, he was a mere wreck of the man he had been on the previous evening. It was with no definite plan of action, but only a vague terror of impending trouble, that

The manager's house stood on a high promontory round which the river swirled and tossed on its way down the valley. Erskine, coming up the narrow path from his morning dip, saw a girl preparing breakfast on the veranda. She came forward and introduced herself with pleasant informality, holding out a well formed hand of the useful type and look ing him frankly in the face.
"I think it is Dr. Erskine, isn't it:

Mrs. Lynn has gone up the Trig with the others, so she asked me to give you your breakfast. I am Bessie Forester." Her rosy cheeks dimpled with a smile, and there was mirth in the sparkle of her brown eyes. Erskine thought Bradbury's dull, vacillating face, and he felt a twinge of regret as he took her

From the shaft they went on to the place where the huge quartz boulders were reduced for the after-crushing process. Bradbury spared no pains to explain the successive stages of the work, but his tone was straugely aloof, like that of a man under hypnotic influence, there rang ever in his ears an undertone of suggestiveness that nearly maddened One-half of his brain seemed to be on fire, while the other was cool and

If Rutherford could be broken, crushed in the noisy mill like a fragment of rock, dumped into that yawning depth rock, dumped into that yawning depth it? What! Murder was your game, was it? What made you want to kill me?"

Bradbury faced him with the courage of blackness! It was a wild idea, and impossible of execution. They passed on.

Erskine walking slowly in front, peering through his dark glasses at every-thing about him, had almost forgotten the presence of his silent companion. The fact was that, after avenging himself once for all in that long-past time for the cruel fraud that had been practiced upon him, he had let the affair pass from his mind entirely, until the chance meeting of the night before had suddenly called it to remembrance. A curious impulse had led him then to tell the tale that he might see how Bradbury would be affected by the unexpected resurrec tion of his dead crime; but he had no desire to repeat his punishment. He was not by nature a vindictive man, and he was now ten years older than when that hounding down of his victim had appealed to his immature sense of justice. Even had it been otherwise, the sight of Bradbury's abject fear could only have roused a contemptuous pity, and since seeing Bessie Forester and knowing how her happiness was bound up in the future of her lover, Erskine had no desire left but that of assuring the man that so far as he was concerned the past need never

He had got the man to his feet while speaking, and was shocked by the drawn look of horror on his face. What they had gone through was enough to overbalance the reason of so weak a nature, and for the moment Bradbury had the appearance of a maniac. But all at once rigid features relaced, and, to Erskine's intense astonishment, the over-seer fell on his knees, sobbing convulsively, and grasped the doctor's hands. "You—you—saved me!" he gasped.
"But I meant to murder you! I thought it was my last chance. I was trying to trip you up, and the fumes intoxicated stuck on her. But don't mention laundry me. I was falling into that burning, oisonous cyanide, and you saved me!"

"that you thought it was your last chance. What did you mean? Could you think it possible that I would nurse an injury for years, waiting for an opportunity like this to denounce you and spoil your life? Now listen to me! You are not mad, though you've done your level best to become so by moping alone in your hut, nursing morbid fancies. But, for five minutes, you were really out of your senses—beside yourself, as people say—and the impulse came over you to murder me. It came upon you from outside, seized you, and passed. It was a near shave, but it passed. Don't forget that. Now, what you and I have to do, for Miss Fortester's sake most of all, is to forget the last ten minutes. Do you understand? Cur quarrel is wiped out with this incident. You will start fresh from today and leave the past buried for ever. For your future wife's sake, Bradbury, we will both agree to this. him out of his doubt; he took the prof fered hand in his own.

"For her sake—" Then a joyous shout interrupted him. Turning hastily, he saw Bessie, and blues, Miss Forester-that's all," answered Erskine, and then he turned away and left the lovers together. The dinner proved a success beyond Mrs. Lynn's expectations. Bradbury bore his honors like a man, while Bessie blushed with pride and pleasure at his modest self-assertion. True, he broke down utterly when attempting to return thanks for the proposal of his own and his flancee's health and future happiness, but no one thought the worse of him for that. The burden of years had fallen from him; he no longer feared what fate might send him; the past was for ever sealed, and the future lay free before

Late that afternoon Erskine took his departure, but not before Bradbury had put into his hands an envelope containing a check for £150. He had added £50 as interest.

Erskine did not open the envelope till next day, and then he smiled pitifully. "Poor beggar!" was all his comment. Two days later Bessie Forester was stonished to receive a draft for £150. An enclosure accompanying it read-"A wedding gift from J. R. Erskine. With sincere good wishes." And to the end of her life Bessie Brad-

It is of novel workmanship, consisting of thousands of empty matchboxes glued symmetrically on to a wooden shell.
The work is not inartistic, and took ten years to accomplish. Mr. Cross, who was 84, had fixed an electric battery on the lid of his coffin with an arrangement of wires beneath the lid. There are no fewer than 500 matchboxes on the lid itself.—London Standard.

AFRICAN MARRIAGE CUSTOMS. Fixing the Social Status of the Bride-

Question of Dowry and Divorce. The marriage customs of West and Southwest Africa are in many cases pe culiar. They differ, of course, in different tribes, but have broad lines in com-uperior to an inland tribe, and even its meanest member claims to rank higher than the most powerful man of an up country tribe. A man may marry any woman he likes of any tribe, it being held that he gives her his own status, whatever that may be, but it is almost unheard of for a woman to marry "beneath" her. As a result some of the women of the most superior coast tribes, like the Mpongwe, look to marriage with white men and frequently attain to it.

Fewer Empty Cars.

The largest decrease in the number of surplus freight cars which has taken place in any fortnight since the improvement in business began is shown in the report of the committee on car efficiency of the American Railway association, which gave a decrease of 50,562 in the number of surplus freight cars between September 16 and September 2, the date of the previous report. An encouraging feature of this very large decrease is that more than half of the total, or 27, 300. were box cars in which are carried higher grades of merchandise than those transported in open cars. The number of idle cars in the country, as shown in this report, has now been reduced to 170,652, compared with the maximum of 413,338 recorded on April 29.

with numerous entrances and exits. According to English planters in Ceylon, when an elephant feels its last hour approaching it will, if permitted to do so, escape into the jungles and die. Once the sick elephant gets away it is never seen again. When they go is a problem. As they vanish so myteriously in the hour of death the tale is told by the natives that they die in an underground cave. The particular cave, however, has never been discovered, though numerous expeditions have sought for it. The person who finds this elephant sepulcher will probably reap a fortune.

A young oak, grown from a "queen oak" acorn in Sherwood forest, was planted by the Duke of Leeds on the spot where the old trysting tree stood, and a walk straight across country brings one to the manor house. The moat was fairly wide and deep, and in digging up part of the ground traces of the foundi-tion of a previous building were found. CLIFF DWELLERS OF UTAH.

Results of Investigations and Explorations of Prof. Cummings.

That the great mesas, cliffs and can-That the great mesas, chils and canyons that now form a large part of the desolate region included in San Juan county, in the southeastern part of Utah, were once the homes of an extensive population that had reached some degree of civilization is the opinion of Prof. Byron Cummings of the University of Utah, who has just returned from a Byron Cummings of the University of Utah, who has just returned from a three months' exploration trip in that region. It has already been established that this desert stretch was once inhabited, but through the efforts of Prof. Cummings and his co-workers it is shown that the people there arrived at a considerable degree of cleverness in building and the manufacture of pottery and weapons. Considerable time was spent in exploring the old pueblos of the mesas, and Prof. Cummings believes the people who occupied the pueblos were the same as those who dwelt on the mesas. About twenty-five miles from Monticello the party excavated a large ruin at the head of Ruin canyon, on Alkali ridge. Three kivas, or ceremonial chambers, were opened, the ruin containing altogether forty-one kivas. While these ruins are similar to those found in other parts of San Juan county apparently they were much more ancient. The people who built them also built strong defensive works on the rim rocks around

ANDREW JOHNSON'S END. To the Last He Was Bitter Against Gen.

Grant. William H. Crook's reminiscences Andrew Johnson in the White House deal in The Century with that President's impeachment, trial and acquittal, and his last days. Mr. Crook says:
"There was one man of those whom he considered his enemies whom Mr. Johnson had not forgiven. It was only a day of two after he took his seat in the Senof two after he took his seat in the Senate that he sent for me to come to his hotel—the old Willard, on Pennsylvania avenue. I found him, on a nearer view, looking very little changed. He was older, of course; there was more gray in his hair; his whole face looked bleached. He seemed finer to me; not less strong, but more delicate. There were no more lines in his face; those that had been there were deeper graven; hat had been there were deeper graven; that was all.

"I asked for all the family, and no told me what there was to tell. Mrs. Johnson, I knew, was still living, but poor Robert Johnson had died soon after poor Robert Johnson had died soon after his father returned to Tennessee. He spoke to me of them both. The grand-children were growing up. He told me of his fight for election.

"And now," he said, 'I want you to tell me where I can find notices about the genuine—manufactured by the Cali-Grant in my scrapbook. You remember where you pasted them in. I don't.' He got the scrapbooks and I put slips of paper in to mark the references he want-ed. As I rose to go he said: "Crook, I have come back to the Senate with two purposes. One is to do what I can to punish the southern brigadiers. They led the south into secession, and they have never had their deserts, The other—" He paused, and his face

'What is the other, Mr. Johnson?" The other is to make a speech against Grant. And I am going to make it this session."

He made the speech in less than two weeks from that evening. It was a clever one, too, and bitter. Every point of Gen. Grant's career which might be considered vulnerable was very skilfully attacked. The fact that he had taken gifts and that it was suspected he desired a third term were played when. Yes: Mr. third term were played upon. Yes; Mr. Johnson did what he had intended to do, had been intending to do ever since he left the white house. He was the best hater I ever knew.

He went back home at the end of the session and then to wight his daughter.

He went back home at the end of the session, and then to visit his daughter, Mrs. Stover, in eastern Tennessee. There, given up to the family associations he clung to, and with the grand-children he loved, he was stricken suddenly with paralysis, and July 31, 1875, he died. It seemed as if, with his speech against President Grant, some spring of action which had kept him fighting broke. The rest was peace.
