CHAUTAUQUE VIII.—Continued. "Claud! Claud!" cried Diana in a low voice that pierced his ears.

"It was a delicious madness, a sweetness not for me, dear," he said, looking steadily at her. "I am poor—heavily handicapped. You are rich—bountifully blessed."

"He speaks well," jeered the old man. "Get you gone, Diana! He tosses you aside like a piece of old iron."

"You wicked, hateful man," Diana said in clear and ringing tones, while her bosom heaved and her wide eyes flung proud defiance at him.

"Do you think I care twopenny for your miserable hoard of gold side by side with his devotion. He is my love, my life! Here, in the night of heaven, I make my choice, Claud, beloved!"

"You have not been taking care of yourself," she said. "You ought not to have moved when you did."

"One can't stay in Paradise for ever," he answered lightly, with an assumption of ease. "Come, my dear, let us sit down here and we can obtain a peep of my ancestral mansion."

Unhappy and perplexed by his changed manner, she followed him as he led her carriage proud, her eyes shadowed; and together they reached a sheltered corner of the garden where a narrow leaping stream made a bright noise as it rushed along in noisy joy to join the lake at their feet.

PORTLAND'S MONEY.

Fearing British, the Bankers of the Maine City Carried Their Treasures to Standish.

Once upon a time, many years ago, all the money of Portland was in the town of Standish. For two years, from 1812 to 1814, the treasure of all the banks of the Forest city lay in the parlor of the Marrett house, in Standish village, and as evidence of the fact today upon the parlor floor can be seen a huge lock which was placed there nearly a century ago to add safeguard to the treasure.

During the year of 1812 the bankers of Portland thought their treasure was in danger of being looted by the British. Chief Kohler thinks he has proved a safe place for their choice fell upon the town of Standish and the Marrett house as a depository for the treasure, says the Kennebec Journal.

Loaded upon a six-ox cart and guarded closely, the money, thousands of dollars of it, was deposited in the Marrett house, where it remained for two years, until the British evacuated the city. It was only the question of time when the money was placed was reinforced by a heavy lock having a brass handle, and the cart was taken to Standish.

That crime in the cities can be reduced to a minimum, if not actually checked, by the simple observance of the Golden Rule, Chief Kohler says.

A year's trial of this policy in dealing with crime and criminals in Cleveland, Ohio, has shown, however, that other cities are preparing to follow the example of Cleveland in instituting the Golden Rule policy.
