Verona and the Viscount

By the Author of "An Indian Prince," "His Natural Debt," "The Penance of Penelope," etc.

CHAPTER I.—Continued.

But her spirits flagged again presently. She was conscious that she did not bring to the preparations of her evening meal much of the brisk cheerfulness which had attended the getting of the breakfast in the morning. The absolute silence of the cottage oppressed her, she thought; she missed old Hannah's bustle, when all was made absolutely neat and clean again, and she went into her sitting room, taking her usual seat, she found herself staring at the ring on the path—seemed a fetter somehow, a weight upon her hand. With a sudden impulse she pulled it off, and she absorbed her. The gradual darkening of the room stopped her, and she was aware that a heavy rain was beating upon the garden gate and a step upon the path.

The color flushed into her face with sheer surprise, as she stood listening. There certainly was a step upon the path—sheary, dragging, uncertain, stumbling, a very odd step. Marcus rose to lift his hat, and she saw that he was regarded her from a face which she had never seen before. She turned quickly to the alarm, and she saw that the lighted candles threw it upon her.

CHAPTER II.

Verona stood staring at the man. A gray greatcoat, a tall, attuned, covered him from chin to feet; a dark peaked cap was pulled forward over his forehead, a pair of very light and keen eyes lifted his face, and she saw that he was regarded her from a face which she had never seen before. She turned quickly to the alarm, and she saw that the lighted candles threw it upon her.

He obeyed mechanically, and with her free hand she closed the door. He was considerably taller than she, but for her to have been slight, and in a moment he recovered himself, and stood erect in the yellow lamplight.

"A thousand pardons!" he said apologetically. "I don't mean to be so good as to allow me to sit down for a time I should be all right, I think." "Yes, yes, of course!" "This way," said Verona.

She led the way into the kitchen, where a fire was blazing, and pulled out the cushions up to the hearth, bidding him sit down, and she would light the lamp. Turning from doing so she looked at her guest had pulled off the peaked cap, and she saw turning faint again. Wait a moment, said Verona.

She hurried across to the sitting room, returning in a minute with a glass containing some crimson liquid in her hand, taining some crimson liquid in her hand, taining some crimson liquid in her hand, taining some crimson liquid in her hand.

"My father was a doctor," she explained simply. "This is a special cordial of his own making. It will revive you better than any other wine or spirits. Drink it slowly."

He obeyed. Waiting until she saw that the faintness had passed, she went to bathe the wound upon his head. Verona was a born nurse—firm, deft, and gentle. Forced to respect lack the thick, dark hair, she naturally examined the other details of his appearance, and she approved of them. She liked the broad forehead, straight black brows, and firm clean-cut lines of cheek and chin, but she was not, she decided, a handsome man.

She brought the things necessary and strapped as skilfully as she had bathed. The business of watching him as he pressed his shoulder and arm; his face was less white now—the cordial had done its work well.

"I am very glad you saw the light," said Verona. It was true this little ripple of sensation in the monotonous stream of her life had pleased, roused, excited her.

"How amusingly odd it was," she thought, that she should have said to Robert only that her doctor had never ever came near her when she was ill, and bewildered he would be if he could enter near and see this occupant of Hannah's old chair! But even Robert would have no doubt about him; whoever and whatever he might be, he was at least a gentleman. Air, voice, manner, dress proclaimed it alike.

"I am glad you saw the light," she repeated. "If you had fainted and lain insensible in this rain it would have been terrible. Did you say you missed your way, and fell?"

"Yes," he spoke slowly, withdrawing his eyes to look thoughtfully at the fire. "I don't know the moor—I was never here before. But I had directions which

The Closest Skimming Separator in the World THE IOWA DAIRY SEPARATOR The Only Gold Medal for Cream Separators was awarded the New Iowa Dairy Separator at the Jamestown Exposition and International Fair. During the past ten years there has been phenomenal improvements in cream separators. It was at the last International Exposition and World's Fair that the NEW IOWA was awarded the only Gold medal. THE ONLY TEST. It was made at Our Request. Official Test made at the Lewis & Clark Exposition: Portland, Ore., Oct. 23, 1905. Jury of Awards, Lewis & Clark Exposition, Portland, Ore. Gentlemen: As per your official request, I have made a test of No. 2 Iowa Dairy Separator at the Exposition grounds. The Separator was run according to instructions and test of the cream, whole milk and skim milk were made with the following results: Cream, 20 per cent butterfat. Whole Milk, 4.4 per cent butterfat. Skim Milk, .61 per cent butterfat. Rated capacity, 450 lbs. per hour. Yours truly, H. V. Tarter, Asst. Commissioner.

Great chance to visit the Seattle Exposition and various points enroute. Ask Chicago & North Western ticket agent for particulars and for free maps, itineraries and booklets. THE IOWA WINS. In a public contest held Nov. 17, 1908, at the Creamery of the Door County Creamery Co., on Cedar St., Sturgeon Bay, Wis., the Iowa Separator won a decisive victory over the DeLaval separator. Wulf & Co., Messrs. Evans and Alexander, two DeLaval experts, conducted and directed the skimming operations of the DeLaval Separator. OUR CHALLENGE. We stand ready to test the "IOWA" Separator against any other make of separator and will deposit in the Bank of Campbellsport ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS to any other separator company's FIFTY that the Iowa will skim closer on the average runs at temperatures of 50, 60, 70, 80 and 90 degrees, and a cream of not less than 25 to 50 per cent than any other separator, all machines to be run exactly as printed instruction book sent out with such machine. Furthermore, if five machines enter the contest we will contribute towards St. Matthews Church, Campbellsport, one hundred dollars if two out of the five do not leave an average of five times as much butterfat in the skim milk as the Iowa, tests to be made by a competent person scrubmitted to the Dairy School at Madison. We to use in these tests No. 2 or 3 Iowa Separators, this being the size in general use by our farmers. There are no Wulf tricks in this challenge, and we have deposited Fifty Dollars in the bank as a forfeit if we refuse to enter the contest. I will give any farmer $25 who will bring this contest about, no machine in the world barred. This is no bluff, try us and find out. We skim with any machine in the world—50 or 100 pounds. Signed, Michael Degenhardt, Campbellsport, Wis. Mr. Degenhardt is the agent for the Iowa in Fond du Lac, Dodge and Sheboygan counties and by purchasing separators in car load lots he is able to quote prices exceedingly low and which appeal to the farmers. These cream separators can be seen at his headquarters in Campbellsport or Mr. Degenhardt will be pleased to call on a prospective buyer. Write today to Mr. Degenhardt if you are interested.
