HORSE THIEF BROUGHT HERE LAST MONDAY

Joseph Livingston, Who Stole a Horse and Buggy Belonging to Chas. Muckerheide on June 8th, Waived Preliminary Hearing and Was Taken to West Bend for Trial

The thief who stole a horse and buggy belonging to Charles Muckerheide on the night of June 8th, was arrested at the House of Correction at Milwaukee by Marshall George F. Brandt and brought to this village on the noon train Monday for his preliminary hearing. The horse thief gave his name as Joseph Livingston and his age as eighteen years. He had just completed a thirty day sentence in the House of Correction at Milwaukee for disorderly conduct in that city and upon a warrant issued some time ago by Charles Muckerheide the thief was immediately seized as he left the House of Correction and brought here by Marshall Brandt. At about 2:30 o'clock Monday afternoon he was brought before Justice of the Peace D. M. Rosenheimer at the village hall. The thief waived preliminary hearing and being unable to furnish $500 bail he was immediately taken by Marshall Brandt, accompanied by Joseph Eberle, Chas. Muckerheide and Frank Becker, to the county jail at West Bend where he will await trial in the now pending term of court.

Local Team Loses to Allenton

The base ball game played here Sunday by our local team with Allenton proved a very interesting and exciting game through out. Many baseball fans turned out to witness the game and tried to help cheer the boys on to victory. It was a hard fought battle which was proved by the score and number of innings played. Ten innings were played with a score of 4 to 5 in favor of Allenton. Erwin Mohme and Alton Altenhofen formed the batteries of the local team and both did splendid work. E. Miller, who played right field, proved himself the star player by catching every thing that came his way and never failing to make the bat and ball meet at his term to bat. All played a fairly good game considering the little practice our boys had. With continual practice our boys can boast of a strong team. Following is the score by innings:
Allenton.....1 2 0 0 0 0 0 1 1-5
The local team will journey to Allenton and play them a return game Sunday.

No More Quick Marriages

No longer will Wisconsin couples board trains for Waukegan, and then get married in Illinois. The county clerk of that Illinois county who has received many a fee from Wisconsin couples who sought to escape the eugenic law, has cause for sorrow. No marriage will be considered legal in Illinois which is not legal in the state in which the contracting parties live. This law was passed by the Illinois state legislature and has been signed by Gov. Dunne. It will make invalid marriages of persons who evade the eugenic law, those who marry within a year after a divorce decree is entered, those who avoid the five day license law, and those who marry under age. The law does not affect marriages which have already taken place.

To Head Naval Board of Great Inventors to Devise New Sea Terrors for Warfare — Secretary Voices Country's Sentiment in Letter.

West Orange, N. J., July 14.—Thomas A. Edison has accepted an invitation from Secretary Daniels to head an advisory board of civilian inventors for a bureau of invention and development to be created in the department. His acceptance will go forward at once to Washington where the new plans await word from the man "who can turn dreams into realities."

Mr. Daniels' idea of utilizing inventive genius of Americans in and out of the military and naval service to meet conditions of warfare shown in the conflict on land and sea in Europe is outlined in a letter written last Wednesday, asking Mr. Edison whether, as a patriotic service to his country, he would undertake the task of advising the proposed bureau.

The plan is to have several men prominent in special lines of inventive research associated in the work. Among the great problems to be laid before the investigators the secretary mentioned submarine warfare, adding that he felt sure that with Mr. Edison's wonderful brain to help them the officers of the navy would be able to meet this new danger with new devices that will assure peace to our country by their effectiveness.

It was through the efforts of the late Bishop Ryan of Buffalo, whom he was to succeed 24 years later, that a "bursch" in the University of Innsbruck of the Austrian Tyrol was obtained for the future prelate in 1873. From there he went to the College of the Propaganda at Rome. On his return to America Father Quigley's first pastorate was at Attica, N. Y., where he served five years.

Three years later he was consecrated bishop of Buffalo to succeed Bishop Ryan. On December 15, 1902, the congregation of the propoganda at Rome selected the bishop of Buffalo as the successor of Archbishop P. A. Feehan.

THE ROAD TO TOMORROW

TOURISTS ARE HELD UP CITY OF MEXICO FALLS

United States Senator Brady of Idaho a Victim—Soldiers Arrest Two Suspects.

Livingston, Mont., July 12.—A party of 125 tourists, including United States Senator Brady of Idaho, was held up in Yellowstone park by three highwaymen. One of the tourists, a New Yorker named Rice, was fired at when he jumped down from a stage coach and ran back to warn other members of the party following in other coaches.

The bullet fired at Rice flattened itself against a rock near by. Rice sped on, and the bandits, realizing that the sound of the shot would act as an alarm, fled into the woods. Col. L. M. Brett, superintendent of the park, said it was impossible at that hour to estimate the amount taken from the tourists. Names of the victims had not been obtained. Soldiers from all parts of the park were ordered by telephone to the scene of the robbery and two suspects were put under guard. The bandits, after holding up the stage, went into the woods and are believed to be heading for the Jackson Hole country of the southern boundary.

Tars on Alabama Save War Vessel and Crews of Sightseers From Destruction by Explosion.

Philadelphia, July 13.—Five hundred visitors aboard the battleship Alabama, flagship of Rear Admiral Helm, commander of the reserve fleet at League Island, were imperiled Sunday when fire was discovered under the forward turret of the 11-inch guns and dangerously close to the magazines. Immediately the reverberant sound of an alarm gong boomed through the big craft. The crew divided itself into two divisions. One force fought the flames and the other hurried the panic-stricken crowds down the gangplank. There was enough gunpowder aboard the ship to blow her into bits. It took an hour of desperate work on the part of the sailors to subdue the flames.

The sailors, knowing that any moment an explosion might blow them all into eternity, faced the peril calmly.

REPLY READY SOON

PRESIDENT TO CONSULT CABINET BEFORE ANSWER IS SENT TO GERMANY.

RETURNS TO CAPITAL SOON

Telegram From Cornish to Secretary Tumulty Indicates Executive Has Arrived at No Decision as to Policy of U. S. Towards Berlin Government.

Washington, July 15.—The first official announcement of the immediate plans of President Wilson for dealing with the situation that has arisen between Germany and the United States came on Tuesday in a telegram from Cornish, N. H., to Secretary Tumulty, stating that the president would return to Washington soon to lay the entire subject before his cabinet. It indicated that the president had not yet arrived at a decision as to the policy of the government. The White House statement was as follows: "Referring to statements appearing in certain morning newspapers with reference to the attitude of the president toward the reply to the German government, Secretary Tumulty this evening gave out the following telegram which he had received from the president:

"Please say that from the moment of the arrival of the official text of the German note I have given the matter the closest attention, keeping constantly in touch with the secretary of state and with every source that would throw light on the situation; that so soon as the secretary of state and I have both maturely considered the situation I shall go to Washington and get into personal conference with him and with the cabinet and that there will be as prompt an announcement as possible of the purposes of the government."

Official opinion here continued to regard the situation as grave. Secretary Lansing and other members of the cabinet who are here hold this view. Mr. Lansing and his assistant have been canvassing the entire field of law and policy presented by the German note and the president already has received some of the memoranda bearing on important points.

The statement from the White House has made it apparent that the president has definitely abandoned the idea of summoning Mr. Lansing to the summer capital. It is assumed, however, that Mr. Wilson will return here the last of the week and that the subject will be laid before the cabinet next Tuesday. Emphasis has been laid in official quarters on the fact that the issues involved are of such seriousness and importance that consideration for a week or more of the kind of reply that should be made ought not to be construed as meaning that the necessity for a firm definition of American policy was underestimated.

Head of U. S. Bureau of Mines Expires in Denver—Was Martyr to "Safety First" Cause.

Denver, Colo., July 15.—Joseph Austin Holmes, director of the federal bureau of mines at Washington and a widely known geologist, died at his home here on Tuesday of tuberculosis. Doctor Holmes had been in poor health for several months. He came to Denver about four months ago with his family in the hope of regaining strength. Doctor Holmes was fifty-five years old and a native of South Carolina. He had been director of the bureau of mines since 1910. Doctor Holmes was regarded by his associates in the government service at Washington as the father of the bureau of education and experiment, has largely reduced the death toll among the underground workers. He also was credited with making "safety first" a national movement.

Terre Haute, Ind., July 12.—A half-orville whirlwind tornado struck a farming district over the state line in Edgar county, Ill., and carried away several buildings. Forty acres of wheat in shock on Sidenbender's farm was carried away so clearly that there is no trace of it. McClain Barcaw's house was carried a hundred feet and dropped, demolished. The roof and windows of the poor farm building were destroyed. At Grandview and Kansas much damage was done.

Washington, July 13.—Proposed increases in rates on stone and marble not polished, lettered or figured, from Chicago and Peoria, Ill., to St. Paul, Minn., was found by the Interstate commerce commission to be justified for stone and marble sawed or dressed, but not for rough stone and marble.

Strike at Arms Factory. Bridgeport, Conn., July 14.—About three hundred structural iron workers at the Remington Arms company's plant struck because of differences between unions employed there as to jurisdiction of an installing machinery.

Garment Workers Are Out. New York, July 14.—A garment workers' strike, the first for several years, began here when 10,000 trousers makers left their shops. The strikers ask a sanitary shop, recognition of union and increase in wages.

Man Vainly Imitated Action of Submarine in Attempt to Escape Eye of His Boss. J. B. Wilson, assistant manager of the McAlpin of New York city, during a lull in his duties, stole up to the Turkish bath of the hotel for a dip, and he took his first plunge, and as he rose he espied at the further edge of the pool the face of his boss, Managing Director Boomer, who has been exhausted. Then he came up to cast a periscope eye about. Mr. Boomer still stood on the brink of the pool and had a stop-watch in his hand. "That must be a record submerison, Mr. Wilson," he remarked dryly. "I congratulate you."

The water turned so cool that Wilson hurried out of it and into his clothes, and within five minutes was twenty floors below the scene of the sub-aquatic exploit. Despair is the blighted bud of hope.

FUNERAL OF SUBLIEUT. R. A. J. WARNEFORD

Sublieut. Reginald A. J. Warneford of the British navy flying corps received the Victoria cross for having destroyed, single handed, a German Zeppelin. Ten days later he was killed by the fall of his aeroplane. In this photograph of his funeral the naval escort is seen firing the final volley over the hero's grave.

To the Swift.

While the morning rush was on one day this week, a young woman followed an open trolley car down Broadway, running two blocks before she caught it. This she was able to do because of the jam of the traffic which retarded the car. Her efforts attracted attention on both sides of the street, and hurrying shop-holders stopped to cheer her on. At Houston street, where she came panting up to the side of the car, she gasped to the conductor that she had left her pocketbook on the seat, and wanted to get it. He obligingly held the car while she made a search. No pocketbook was found, but as she stepped off into the street again, her eyes filled with tears, there came a shout from behind. It was the motorman of the succeeding car, and in his hand, as he leaned over his brake, he held the pocketbook.

Mexican Approaches.

Although Mexico lies half within and half without the tropics, it is generally known as a tropical country, and, indeed, the main gateway to it, Vera Cruz, is a tropical seaport, which may well give rise to such a general impression upon the part of the European traveler. A different impression, however, is acquired upon entering the country from the United States to the north. No tropic forests and bright plumaged birds are encountered there as at Vera Cruz. Instead are vast stretches of desert lying within the temperate zone, alternating with cultivated plains and interspersed with large towns.

ENEMY REMAINED ON WATCH

A habit of appearing unexpectedly. Hoping that his chief had not seen him, Wilson dived again immediately, intending to remain below until Mr. Boomer had finished his inspection and departed.

An experience of several years in his Britannic majesty's naval reserve had accustomed Wilson to aquatic sports, and staying under the water was one of his proficiencies. So he crawled along on the bottom of the pool, imagining himself a submarine.

The CZAR'S SPY
The Mystery of a Silent Love
By Chevalier WILLIAM LE QUEUX

SYNOPSIS.

Corbin Gregg is called upon in Leghorn by Horby, the yacht Lolo's owner, and dining aboard with him and his friend, Byron, they accidentally see a torn photograph of a young girl. This might be the girl who is the subject of the story...

secret—a secret which her uncle, Baron Oberg, is desirous of learning. I know she holds him in deadly fear—she is in terror that she may inadvertently betray to him the truth!

CHAPTER IX.

Strange Discoveries Are Made. The strange letter of Elma Heath, combined with what Lydia Moreton had told me, aroused within me a determination to investigate the mystery. From the moment I had landed from the Lolo on that hot, breathless night at Leghorn, mystery had crowded upon mystery until it was all bewildering. Had it not been for the mystery of it all—and mystery ever arouses the human curiosity—I should have given up trying to get at the truth. Yet as a man with some leisure, and knowing by that letter of Elma Heath's that she was in some distress, I redoubled my efforts to ascertain the reason of it all.

"Well, the last I received only a fortnight ago. If you will wait a moment I will go and get it. It was so strange that I haven't destroyed it. And she went out, and I heard by the front door of her skirts that she was ascending the stairs.

After five minutes of breathless anxiety she rejoined me, and handing me the letter to read, said:

"It is not in her handwriting—I wonder why?"

The paper was of foreign make, with blue lines ruled in squares. Written in a hand that was evidently foreign, for the mistakes in the orthography were many, was the following curious communication:

My Dear Lydia: Perhaps you may never get this letter—the last I shall ever be able to send you. Indeed, I run great risks in sending it. And you do not know the awful disaster that has happened to me, all the terror and the tortures I endure. But no one can assist me, and I am now looking forward to the time when it will be over. Do you recollect our old peaceful days in the garden at Chichester? I think of them always, always, and compare that sweet peace of the past with my own terrible sufferings of today. Ah, how I wish I might see you once again, how that I might feel your hand upon my brow, and hear your words of hope and encouragement! But happiness is now debarr'd from me, and I am only sinking to the grave under this slow torture of body and of soul.

"This will pass through many hands before it reaches the post. If, however, it ever does get dispatched and you receive it, will you do me the last favor—a favor to an unfortunate girl who is friendless and hapless, and who will no longer trouble the world? It is this: Take this letter to London, and call upon Mr. Martin Woodroffe at 30 Cork street, Piccadilly. Show him my letter, and tell him from me that through it all I have kept my promise, and that the secret is still safe. He will understand—and also know why I cannot write this with my own hand. If he is abroad, keep it until he returns. It is all I ask of you, Lydia, and I know that if this reaches you, you will not refuse me. You have been my only friend and confidant, and I now bid you farewell, for the unknown beckons me, and from the grave I cannot write. Again farewell, and for ever.

Your loving and affectionate friend, ELMA.

"A very strange letter, is it not?" remarked the girl at my side. "I can't make it out. You see there is no address, but the postmark is Russian. She is evidently in Russia."

"In Finland," I said, examining the stamp and making out the post town to be Abo. "But have you been to London and executed this strange commission?"

"No. We are going up next week. I intend to call upon this person named Woodroffe."

I made no remark. He was, I knew, abroad, but I was glad at having obtained two very important clues: first, the address of the mysterious yachtman, Woodroffe, alias Horby, and, secondly, ascertaining that the young girl I sought was somewhere in the vicinity of the town of Abo, the Finnish port on the Baltic.

"Poor Elma, you see, speaks in her letter of some secret, Mr. Gregg," my companion said. "She says she wishes this Mr. Woodroffe, whoever he is, to know that she has kept her promise and has not divulged it. This only bears out what I have all along suspected."

"What are your suspicions?" "Well, from her deep, thoughtful manner, and from certain remarks she at times made to me, I believe Elma is in possession of some great and ter-of which combined to form the most complete and remarkable enigma ever presented in life.

Those September days were full of anxiety for me. Alone and unaided I was trying to solve one of the greatest of problems, plunged as I was in a veritable sea of mystery. I wanted to see Muriel Leithcourt, and to question her further regarding Elma Heath. Therefore again I left Euston and, traveling through the night, took my seat at the breakfast table at Greenlaw next morning.

Sir George, who was sitting alone—it is not my aunt's habit to appear early—welcomed me, and then in his bluff manner sniffed and exclaimed:

"Nice goings on up at Rannoch! Have you heard of them?" "No. What?" I cried breathlessly, staring at him.

"Well, it's a very funny story, and there are a dozen different distorted versions of it," he said. "But, from what I can gather the true facts are these: About seven o'clock the night before last, as Leithcourt and his house party were dressing for dinner, a telegram arrived. Mrs. Leithcourt opened it and at once went off into hysterics, while her husband, in a breathless hurry, slipped off his evening clothes again and got into an old blue serge suit, tossed a few things into a bag, and then went along to Muriel's room to urge her to prepare for secret flight."

"Flight!" I gasped. "What, have they gone?" "Listen, and I'll tell you. The servants have described the whole affair down in the village, so there's no doubt about it. Leithcourt showed Muriel the telegram and urged her to fly. At Lord Fisher Believes in Speed. Although Lord Fisher is four years older than the regulation age at which a naval officer may normally be employed, his methods at the admiralty give little indication of the advance of years. A short time ago he pounced upon a department at Whitehall with the intimation that a certain number of new vessels were required. The number, it may be mentioned, was about six or seven times as many as it is customary to order in any one year. The whole of the contracts for these vessels were placed in three days, and when the first sea lord went to inquire what had happened, and was told, he spared nothing in his execration of what he called the waste of time. In the ordinary way, three months is quite an average time for considering such a tender.—London Globe.

Laid Down Point of Law. Mississippi Judgment Is That Plaintiff Must Come Into Court With Clean Hands.

In a suit for damages against a telegraph company heard by the supreme court of Mississippi in Western Union Telegraph vs. McCluid it appeared that plaintiff had received two telegrams from a woman known to be an improper person. The company's messenger informed various persons that the plaintiff had received these messages from the woman in question, thus betraying his intimacy with the sender, and, as he charged in his complaint, caused him to lose caste with respectable women and forced him to resign his position where he then lived and take another less lucrative elsewhere. In holding that there could be no recovery against the company the court said:

"If a plaintiff cannot open his case without showing that he has broken the law a court will not aid him. It has been said that the objection may often sound very ill in the mouth of first she refused, but for her father's sake she was induced to prepare to accompany him. Of course, the guests were in ignorance of all this. The brougham was ordered to be ready in the stable yard and not to go round, while Mrs. Leithcourt's maid tried to bring the lady back to her senses. Leithcourt himself, it seemed, rushed hither and thither, seizing the jewel cases of his wife and daughter and whatever valuables he could place his hand upon, while the mother and daughter were putting on their things. As he rushed down the main staircase to the library, where his check book and some ready cash were locked in the safe, he met a stranger who had just been admitted and shown into the room. Leithcourt closed the door and faced him. What afterward transpired, however, is a mystery, for two hours later, after he and the two women had escaped, leaving the house party to their own diversions, the stranger was found locked in a large cupboard and insensible. The sensation was a tremendous one. Cowan, the doctor, was called, and declared that the stranger had been drugged and was suffering from some narcotic. The servant who admitted him declared that the man had said he had an appointment with his master and that no card was necessary. He, however, gave the name of Chater."

"Chater!" I cried, starting up. "Are you certain of that name?" "I only know what Cowan told me," was my uncle's reply. "But do you know him?"

"Not at all. Only I've heard that name before," I said. "I knew a man out in Italy of the same name, but where is the visitor now?"

"In the hospital at Dumfries. They took him there in preference to leaving him alone at Rannoch."

"Of course. Everyone has left, now the host and hostess have slipped off without saying good-by. Scandalous affair, isn't it? But, my boy, you'll remember that I always said I didn't like those people. There's something mysterious about them, I feel certain. That telegram gave them warning of the visit of the man Chater, depend upon it, and for some reason they're afraid of him. It would be interesting to know what transpired between the two men in the library. And these are people who've been taken up by everybody—mere adventurers, I should call them!"

And old Sir George sniffed again at thought of such scandal happening in the neighborhood. "If Gilrae must let Rannoch, then, by in the name of Fortune doesn't, as let it to respectable folk and not to the first fellow who answers his advertisement in the Field? It's simply disgraceful!"

"Certainly it is a most extraordinary story," I declared. "Leithcourt evidently wished to escape from his visitor, and that's why he drugged him."

"Why he poisoned him, you mean. Cowan says the fellow is poisoned, but that he'll probably recover. He is already conscious, I hear."

I resolved to call on the doctor, who happened to be well known to me, and obtain further particulars. Therefore at eleven o'clock I drove into Dumfries and entered his consulting room.

He was a spare, short, fair man, a trifle bald, and when I was shown in he welcomed me warmly, speaking with his pronounced Galloway accent.

"Well, it is a very mysterious case, Mr. Gregg," he said, after I had told him the object of my visit. "The gentleman is still at the hospital, and I have to keep him very quiet. He was poisoned without a doubt and has had a very narrow escape of his life. The police got wind of the affair and Mackenzie called to question him. But he refused to make any statement whatever, apparently treating the affair very lightly. The police, however, are mystified as to the reason of Mr. Leithcourt's sudden flight, and are very anxious to get at the bottom of the curious affair."

"Naturally. And more especially after the tragedy up in Rannoch wood a short time ago," I said.

"That's just it," said the doctor, removing his pipe-ear and rubbing them. "Mackenzie seems to suspect some connection between Leithcourt's sudden disappearance and that mysterious affair. It seems very evident that the telegram was a warning to Leithcourt of the man Chater's intention of calling, and that the last-named was shown in just at the moment when the fugitive was on the point of leaving."

Knowing all that I did, I was not surprised. Leithcourt had undoubtedly taken him unawares, but knights of industry never betray each other.

My next visit was to Mackenzie, for whom I had to wait nearly an hour, as he was absent in another quarter of the town.

"Ah, Mr. Gregg!" he cried gladly, as he came in to find me seated in a chair patiently reading the newspaper. "You are the very person I wish to see. Have you heard of this strange affair at Rannoch?"

"I have," was my answer. "Has the man in the hospital made any statement yet?"

"None. He refuses point blank," answered the detective. "But my own idea is that the affair has a very close connection with the two mysteries of the wood."

"The first mystery—that of the man—proves to be a double mystery," I said.

"How? Explain it."

"Well, the waiter Olinto Santini is alive and well in London."

"What!" he gasped, starting up. "Then he is not the person you identified him to be?"

"No. But he was masquerading as Santini—made up to resemble him. I mean, even to the mole upon his face."

"But you identified him positively?"

"When a person is dead it is very easy to mistake countenances. Death alters the countenance so very much."

"That's true," he said reflectively. "But if the man were buried is not the Italian, then the mystery is considerably increased. Why was the real man's wife here?"

"And where has her body been concealed? That's the question."

"Again a mystery. We have made a thorough search for four days, without discovering any trace of it. Quite confidentially, I'm wondering if this man Chater knows anything. It is curious, to say the least, that the Leithcourts should have fled so hurriedly on this man's appearance. But have you actually seen Olinto Santini?"

"Yes, and have spoken with him."

"I sent you to London asking that inquiries should be made at the restaurant in Bayswater, but up to the present I have received no report."

"I have chatted with Olinto. His wife has mysteriously disappeared, but he is in ignorance that she is dead."

"There is widespread conspiracy here, depend upon it, Mr. Gregg. It will be an interesting case when we

London and discharged all the late-tenant's servants, keeping on only his own. Ann Cameron, a housemaid, was one of these, and it was she whom I met when entering by the servants' hall.

On questioning her, I found her most willing to describe how she was in the corridor outside the young mistress' dressing room when Mr. Leithcourt dashed along in breathless haste with the telegram in his hand. She heard him cry: "Look at this! Read it, Muriel. We must go. Put on your things at once, my dear. Never mind about luggage. Every minute lost is of consequence. What!" he cried a moment later. "You won't go? You'll stay here—stay here and face them? Good heavens! girl, are you mad? Don't you know what this means? It means that the secret is out—the secret is out, you hear! We must fly!"

The woman told me that she distinctly heard Miss Muriel sobbing, while her father walked up and down the room speaking rapidly in a low tone. Then he came out again and returned to his dressing room, while Miss Muriel presumably changed from her evening gown into a dark traveling dress.

"Did she say anything to you?" I inquired.

"Only that they were called away suddenly, sir. But," the domestic added, and we all knew that something terrible had happened. Mrs. Leithcourt gave orders that nothing was to be told to the guests, who dined alone, believing that their host and hostess had gone down to the village to see an old man who was dying. That was the story we told them, sir."

"And in the meantime the Leithcourts were in the express going to Carlisle?"

"Yes, sir. They say in Dumfries that the police telegraphed after them, but they had reached Carlisle and evidently changed there, and so got away."

By the administration of a judicious tip I was allowed to go up to Miss Muriel's room, an elegantly furnished little chamber in the front of the fine old place, with a deep old-fashioned window commanding a magnificent view across the broad Tithedale.

The room had been tidied by the maids, but allowed to remain just as she had left it. I advanced to the window, in which was set the large dressing table with its big swing mirror and silver-topped bottles, and on gazing out saw, to my surprise, it was the only window which gave a view of that corner of Rannoch wood where the double tragedy had taken place. Indeed, any person standing at the spot would have a clear view of that one distant window while out of sight of all the rest. A light might be placed there at night as a signal, for instance; or by day a towel might be hung from the window as though to dry and yet could be plainly seen at that distance.

Another object in the room also attracted my attention—a pair of long field glasses. Had she used these to keep watch upon that spot?

I took them up and focused them upon the boundary of the wood, finding that I could distinguish everything quite plainly.

"That's where they found the man who was murdered," explained the servant, who still stood in the doorway.

"I know," I replied. "I was just trying to see the spot." Then I put them down, and on turning saw upon the mantel shelf a small, bright red candle shade, which I seized in my hand.

It was made, I found, to fit upon the electric table lamp.

"Miss Muriel was very fond of a red light," explained the young woman; and as I held it I wondered if that light had ever been placed upon the toilet table and the blind drawn up—whether it had ever been used as a warning of danger?

As I expressed a desire to see the young lady's boudoir, the maid Cameron took me down to the luxurious little room where, the first moment I entered, one fact struck me as peculiar. The picture of Elma Heath was no longer there. The photograph had been taken from its frame and in its place was the portrait of a broad-shouldered, full-bearded man in a foreign military uniform—a picture that, being soiled and faded, had evidently been placed there to fill the empty frame.

"Has the gentleman who called on the evening of Mr. Leithcourt's disappearance been back here again since he left the hospital?" I inquired as a sudden idea occurred to me.

CLEANLINESS IN THE DAIRY

Milk Passes Through Many Hands From Cow to Consumer—Strainer Does Not Remove Filth.

The importance of putting upon the market milk that is clean and of good quality should call for special effort on the part of the dairymen, for the reason that the consumer is willing to pay more for it if convinced of the fact of the superiority of the products

Loy Pail—Cover Aids in Keeping Out Dirt.

Milk passes through so many hands from the cow to the consumer as to render the matter of obtaining pure and clean milk a difficult one. Too many console themselves with the fact that they strain the milk before selling it, but the strainer does not remove soluble filth.

It is gratifying to know that some dairymen wash the udders of the cows at every milking time, wiping them clean with towels, avoiding every chance of filth entering the milk. Such dairymen get good prices, which are secured by their reputation for skillful management of their cows and their products.

The cow is not as clean as the hog, so far as selecting a suitable place for resting is concerned, and where the dairymen himself is careless and does not keep the stalls clean, as well as brush the cows and wash the udders, it is almost impossible to have clean milk.

Hands Up! Ever hear that sort of a command? We hope not, but if you ever should hear it and were carrying around a pocket full of money we'll bet that you would feel rather shaky when your hands go into the air. But, if you had adopted the modern plan, had your money in a good safe bank like ours, a holdup would not worry you so much. The robber might "lift" your check book but it wouldn't do him any good, and we would give you another one. Moral, keep your money in the bank. Bank of Kewaskum Kewaskum, Wisconsin

SOME men have tried so long to find tobacco that would satisfy them, that they are naturally a little skeptical when they first hear of the Real Tobacco Chew. But once they get the good tobacco taste they want to help other men. That's why they tell one another about it.

A little chew of pure, rich, mellow tobacco—seasoned and sweetened just enough—cuts out so much of the grinding and spitting.

THE REAL TOBACCO CHEW IS NOW CUT TWO WAYS!! W-B CUT IS LONG SHRED. RIGHT CUT IS SHORT-SHRED.

Take less than one-quarter the old size chew. It will be more satisfying than a mouthful of ordinary tobacco. Just take a nibble of it until you find the strength chew that suits you, then see how easily and evenly the real tobacco taste comes, how it satisfies, how much less you have to spit, how few chews you take to be tobacco satisfied. That's why it is The Real Tobacco Chew. That's why it costs less in the end. The taste of pure, rich tobacco does not need to be covered up. An excess of licorice and sweetening makes you spit too much.

One small chew takes the place of two big chews of the old kind.

Notice how the salt brings out the rich tobacco taste.

Number Tags on Fishes.

An idea of what is being learned by scientific study of fish life in the waters off the coast of Norway was given by Dr. John Hjert in a recent lecture. Fishes bearing numbered tags have been systematically released during a number of years, and the records of the time and place of release and subsequent capture, with other facts, have been carefully kept. In this way much has been learned of migration and of growth and age as indicated by annual rings on the scales. It has been shown that growth is more rapid in favorable years than in others. The basis of an estimate of the catch of any season to the number of fish available has been obtained, this ratio for the common food fishes being about one to ten.

MAN TO BE PITIED

Born Dissenter Finds Himself With Few Friends.

The World Hesitates to Believe in the Honesty of Such an Individual, Though He May Consider Himself Independent.

The born dissenter generally merits a share of the world's frowns which he somehow manages to evade. Perhaps it is because the world pities him, and what it pities it hesitates to frown upon. But a lively soul abhors pity as much as it does condemnation. Not the born dissenter, however. If he abhors anything it is the thought that some day he will miss an opportunity to exhibit his talent for dissenting in a situation where his example would influence others to see his conception of right. He denies himself tobacco not because he does not like it, but because he likes to have his friends believe that he thinks it injurious, and has the strength to do without it. In the midst of a social gathering he pleads a business engagement as an excuse for leaving. He has no business engagement, but it pleases him to think that he has impressed a certain group of persons with his attention to business, even in the face of a pleasant alternative. In matters of politics and religion and other things that do not immediately touch his pocketbook, his opinion is generally contrary to that of the majority, not because that is the way he thinks, but because to be with the majority is to be merely one of the mob, and to admit the possession of intellectual attributes hardly above the ordinary. He calls this independence, and as often as not he is admired for it. He is also commended for his virtues. They are stern virtues, and he clings to them successfully. As a matter of fact, they are negative virtues, and all of them involve his penchant for dissension. He is good because, to his way of thinking, the vast majority of persons are not good. He is therefore, different and better, and this is distinction enough for him. The only trouble with him is that he has frozen the soul out of himself. His kindness consists in avoiding opportunities to be unkind, and since kindness is the greatest of human virtues he is forced to live a frigid existence in the alleyways of life, and men pity him.—Exchange.

IN A DOCTOR'S OFFICE

The following record of an actual consultation is suggestive and instructive. The physician's diagnosis was neurasthenia, or so called "nervous prostration."

"Doctor! what can I do for frequent rushes of blood to my head?"

"What do you mean by that, blushing?"

"No, just what I say, a sort of surging of blood up through my chest, neck and into my head."

"There is no such thing possible. You may have the sensation of something like that happening, but no such thing occurs. Have you any other symptoms?"

"Yes, headaches, an ache in the very top of my head."

"Uh huh—what kind of work are you doing?"

"A good deal of indoor brain-work."

"Been having trouble of any kind—family or business?"

"Yes no end of annoyances, disagreements, and worries."

"So—how much play have you had lately?"

"None—for that matter, never did have any to speak of,—don't know how to play."

"I thought so."

"I wish Doctor, you would give me something to tone me up a bit, something to get some of my old time vigor back. Wouldn't some sleeping draught at night with a stimulant for daytime be a good thing for me?"

"It would not?"

"What can you do then?"

"I can do very little except to give you some good wholesome counsel. You have got to learn to play—but I don't mean exercise—but play. You won't like it at first, and it isn't likely that the first kind you try will suit you. I can't pick out what will be suited to you either. It took me years to find out that golf was my game—that I could get more enjoyment, more real recreation and relaxation out of an hour's golf than I could out of any other thing I ever tried. Golf may suit you, and it may not. Try one thing after another till you have found your game. Then enjoy it. It may be botanical, photography, geology, studying out of door advertising, any interest which will absorb your whole thought for the time being. Don't give up if you find that the hobbies of other men don't satisfy you. Get an outdoor-hobby of your own and ride it till you are ready to sleep nights and until your daytime work takes a new hold on your interest."

"I'll try it, Doctor."

"You had better do it—for if you don't, you'll be a broken down old man, years before your time."

Inventor Ahead of His Time.

Fifty or more years ago a Birmingham, (Eng.) inventor manufactured an airship very much on the lines of the modern Zeppelin, which it was suggested could be used for bomb-dropping in the event of invasion. This idea was laughed at by the scientists of the day as being impossible, and certainly unworthy the attention of any civilized nation. So the man's invention was literally killed by ridicule, and the machine, in which several flights were made was eventually destroyed by fire as a means of effectually removing any further cause for sarcasm.
