LEGION DAY PICNIC TO BE BIG EVENT

That the Legion Day Picnic to be held by the Kewaskum Post No. 887, Sunday, August 10th, is going to be one of the biggest events of the biggest held in this village in years, now looks very promising. Up to the present time every Legion Post within a radius of thirty-five miles has accepted the invitation sent out by the post, and will attend, accompanied by a band. Not only this, Geo. H. Schmidt, General Chairman, of the arrangement committee, is receiving a large number of inquiries daily from posts throughout the state, asking for information regarding the price money to be given away, with the intent of attending the picnic and participating in the parade for the prizes. A very good offer has also been received from the Waukesha Legion band consisting of fifty-two men, to furnish the concert music for the big event. The committee on amusements is receiving many offers daily from different companies who are anxious to come here with a great variety of entertainments. It being still a little early in the game, we are unable at this time to give any definite information as to what companies for amusements will be accepted, for reason that the Legion is awaiting very enthusiastic in order to get good class and wholesome entertainments. All committees are hard at work getting things lined up and as soon as anything definite has been worked out it will be published in the columns of the Statesman.

Who's got the button. One of the most laughable situations in "No Boddy's Money," a Paramount picture starring Jack Holt, which will be the feature at the Kewaskum Movies on Sunday evening. This necktie passes from hand to hand at a dizzying rate of speed, everybody trying to get rid of it by passing it to his neighbor.

Mr. Holt in the role of a wealthy young man who tries burgling for adventure and pastime, chooses for his pal a real yegg, Eddie, for whom everything of value has a lure. When Eddie returns to the "bones" life, he endeavors to return Eddie. He hires his burglar pal as a secretary. Then the fun begins in earnest.

Mr. Holt falls in love with the Governor's daughter. When he visits her his secretary accompanies him. Finding the safe open, Eddie takes from there a pearl necklace. But he is seen by Holt, who demands the necklace with the purpose of returning it. Before he can do so, however, the Governor enters the room.

CRUSHED TO DEATH

John Plautz, a Random Lake farmer, was crushed to death last week Friday underneath the parts of a heavy iron stove when a sudden surge of the truck driven by his brother, Gustav, plunged the heavy machine from one side to the other side of the highway. The victim was thrown from his seat and crushed at some distance and struck by heavy pieces of the stove. The accident took place on highway 22, just east of Plymouth, where the brothers had bought a large hot stove and were on their way to the farm home, two miles north of Random Lake. The injured man was immediately taken to the Plymouth hospital where he died within a half hour. Eye witnesses assert that the accident was caused by one of the wheels of the truck getting off the concrete and into a rut alongside. Gustav Plautz, the driver, declared that his truck was crowded off the concrete when a creamery truck passed. When the wheel fell into the rut, he got something about the steering gear broke. The truck was badly damaged when it struck a telephone pole. The victim was 69 years old. Funeral was held Monday from the home and the church at Sleiman Center, Sheboygan county.

Someone had told her that Highway 15 was the right highway to Denver. When Chief Henry Brinkman, head of the local police department, questioned her she admitted that she had run away from home. At first she told the Chief that she was from Chicago but after a severe grilling she got her to admit she was from Milwaukee, where upon he communicated with the Milwaukee police who notified her father, who called for her. She was severely reprimanded and promised that she would not do it again. The dog was to be her guard while she slept in the fields. She did not realize that it is quite a stroll to Denver. AMERICAN RED CROSS TO MAKE CHRISTMAS BAGS

According to Mrs. Christ. Walter, Chairman of the Washington County Chapter, American Red Cross, volunteer workers will make Christmas bags during the summer months for soldiers now on duty in China, Guam, Samoa, Alaska and Hawaii. The West Bend Girl's Club of this village is making bags and the Jackson Branch of the Red Cross has expressed a willingness to fill three. Anyone who wishes to make soldiers happy should get in touch with the Red Cross chapter.

The bags are made of blue cretonnes, ten inches square, and are filled with small inexpensive articles, such as wrapped separately. Puzzles, pocket knives, handkerchiefs, pencils, and other unbreakable articles may be sent.

Chapters all over the country have been engaged in this activity for a number of years. The replies received from the men indicate that the thoughtfulness of the Red Cross has made a difference to them, many of whom would have no Christmas remembrance whatever. One soldier wrote as follows to "the lady who packed my bag": "I am an old soldier here. I makes a good come in my throat to think that back there in the home land there is some one who thinks of the soldiers. It is the first Christmas gift I have had in a long time. Your kindness has placed the hearts of my fellow soldiers, men who are used to having nothing but an Army dinner to look forward to at Christmas time."

HOME OF JEFFERSON WORTHY OF ITS BUILDER

Conceded to Be Architectural Expression of His Tastes and Ideals.

Immortal Author of Declaration of Independence Rests Among Scenes of Beauty.

Thomas Jefferson in his day had one of the finest mansions on the American continent. The author of the Declaration of Independence, said a celebrated Frenchman, was the first American to consult the fine arts in building without a shelter. It may be truthfully said that Monticello is the personal creation of Thomas Jefferson; it is an architectural expression of his tastes and ideas. He drew the plans for the mansion, laid out the grounds and supervised in person the work, which was done by his own slaves, says a writer in the Pathfinder Magazine. The lumber was from his own forests, the nails were made in his own nail factory and the bricks were burnt in kilns on the plantation. Jefferson was born in Shadwell about three miles from Monticello. He became the head of the family at four years when his father died and left him with his mother, several sisters and an imbecile brother. When Jefferson returned from college he was the richest, the best-educated and the most conspicuous young man in Albemarle county. It was during this period that he conceived the idea of building a home on Monticello, which in Italian means "little mountain."

who should die first should be buried by the other under this old oak in full view of the beautiful Blue Ridge mountains.

Dabney Carr's Early Death. Years passed by. The tie of friendship was strengthened by Dabney's marriage to Jefferson's favorite sister. Both Jefferson and Dabney were elected to the state legislature. They cast their lot with Patrick Henry and the anti-king party. One day young Dabney Carr, almost with the eloquence of a Cicero, made a speech advocating a union of all the colonies against the tyranny of Britain. Every patriot heart in Virginia was excited and Dabney Carr was their leader. But poor Dabney never saw the end of the struggle. The youth who so fearlessly bearded the Huzzar then died before the Revolution had really begun. Jefferson was absent and Dabney's body was buried at Shadwell. When Jefferson returned he did not forget the compact of their boyhood. He could not break faith with his dead friend. So the body of Dabney was disinterred and laid to rest under the grand old oak on the slope of Monticello. Again time sped by. Over half a century elapsed. The great statesman died at the ripe age of eighty-three. Then Dorsey, the gardener at Monticello, dug a grave for his old master beside Jefferson's Own Epitaph. Walk up the slope we come to a small graveyard enclosed by a high iron fence. Directly in front of the cemetery gate is a simple marble shaft bearing this inscription: "Here lies Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence, of the statute for religious freedom in Virginia, and founder of the University of Virginia." So this is the tomb of Jefferson, the man who wrote the immortal Declaration of Independence, who served successively as member of the Continental congress, governor of Virginia, ambassador to France, secretary of state under Washington, vice president under John Adams and twice as President of the United States, and who spent the last years of his life as the revered "sage of Monticello." But why does the body of Jefferson lie buried here in this lonely mountain spot?

The answer is a beautiful story. From earliest boyhood Little Mountain was Jefferson's favorite resort. Here he and his friend Dabney Carr came in the afternoons to study, to talk, to dream and to watch the sun bury itself in Carter's mountain, which rises 300 feet above Monticello. Under an old oak the two boys built a rustic seat and many were the happy days they spent there together. Jefferson loved Dabney more than all his other friends. One day they made a boyish compact. They agreed that the one that of Dabney Carr and the second part of the compact was fulfilled. The mansion itself stands in classic simplicity among the trees on the very summit of the mountain. From the west it has the appearance of a stately one-story building surmounted by a white octagonal dome. This dome was originally intended for a billiard room, but before it was completed the Virginia legislature passed a law prohibiting billiards, both in public and in private. The dome was then converted into a ballroom. One of the most noticeable features about the estate is the absence of barns, sheds and out-buildings. Jefferson had such buildings erected far enough down the mountain slope so as not to mar the landscape on top.

Enduring Claims to Fame. Jefferson dictated his own epitaph, and it is interesting as an estimate by a great man of his own achievements. His title to the regard of posterity he based on the fact that he was "author of the Declaration of American Independence, and of the statute of Virginia for religious freedom, and father of the University of Virginia."

No mention of the fact that he was President of the United States for two terms, and might have continued in office if he had not chosen to follow Washington's wise and noble precedent and refused a third term. No mention of his purchase of the magnificent empire lying west of the Mississippi. No mention of his other high official honors, such as being vice president, secretary of state, minister to France, member of congress, and war governor of Virginia, when his courage and wisdom in sustaining the strategic policy of Washington in the North, in spite of danger and sacrifice to Virginia and to himself, were of great moment to the common cause. These were doubtless all honors or services of less enduring significance than the authorship of the statute of religious freedom or the Declaration of Independence, and there is a certain pride in ignoring them. But in considering Jefferson's career we do not forget that his successful attack upon the law of primogeniture and of entail was a step toward the democratic distribution of property which was important. The purchase of Louisiana was the act of a far-seeing statesman worthy to be named in the epitaph of the greatest. But it was done in defiance of Jefferson's theory of constitutional authority, although Jefferson, rightly, took his theories very seriously. It was a conspicuous example of the truth that a great statesman, like a great commander, knows when to disobey.

of which they see the national emblem. The flag is the flag of a people who have been called on to make great sacrifices in behalf of noble causes, and who have not held back. National independence, freedom, national unity, democracy—men have fought and died for these things when they fought and died for the flag. Why then it was carried to Europe in the great war it was greeted by all people as the banner of liberty and justice—and so it is.—Indianapolis News.

Liberty and Justice Under the American Flag

Many people are disposed to undervalue symbols, while others exalt them above the thing signified. The American flag as a symbol is to be revered for what it represents, and only because it does represent certain things which the American people ought never to forget. We all know what those things are, and yet at times they do not seem to have any vital relation to the life of the people. Liberty, of course, is witnessed to by the flag. But there are strange ideas afloat about liberty. It does not mean the right of every man to do as he pleases, but it does mean the right of the citizen to use his own faculties for his own development. Our liberty has a long history, reaching back into English history which, up to the revolution, was also ours, and is set up to the revolution. American liberty is not a creation, but a growth which culminated in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution. It is for this sort of liberty—an ordered and institutional liberty—that our flag stands. It is also the pledge of equality of opportunity. Self-government, the right to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," the great federal principle and the representative system—these are some of the blessings that Americans should think

Weapons for Patriots

Three or four Massachusetts foundries turned out Revolutionary cannon. At Bridgewater, Hugh Orr, whose establishment had already a quarter of a century's standing, produced a great number of iron and several pieces of brass ordnance from three to thirty-two pounders. These pieces were cast solid and bored—a novelty. In Springfield the government works were begun in 1778. Cannon for the Revolutionary navy came from Hope furnace in the town of Slatkote, Rhode Island. The Connecticut council, before the war had long continued, expended $2,250 on a furnace in Salisbury to cast cannon and employed a corps of fifty-nine men to conduct it.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

AUSTRALIAN WATER RAT

"Some creatures may not think it is particularly fine to be a rat. "But, then, you can't please everybody. In my rat way I have discovered that. "We are enormous rats and to us that seems to be very splendid. "We wouldn't want to be little rats. We would feel as though we weren't being given a full share of our rat rights. "We would feel as though we had been cheated. "But we haven't been cheated, for we have been given our full shares and we are big rats. "Our tails are not quite as long as our bodies, but we don't mind that. We like to have our own special ways. "We only like to travel about at night. Then it is that we find our food along the rivers. "We like vegetables and little shell-fish. We eat well and enjoy our food, as every good rat should do. "And perhaps every other good creature, for that matter! "How we do love to swim and splash and play and have a good time in the water! "Above everything in the world we love the water. It is our rat delight to play in it every night. We have games and plenty of fun. "But though we have a lot of fun ourselves, we're shy. The big world and people and other creatures we feel we should keep away from. "Maybe they're glad that we do. Maybe they would not want a lot of Water Rats coming to call on them. "And if a lot of Water Rats surprised them by paying them a visit they might find it hard to be polite. "They might not be able to say: "Oh, this is such a pleasant surprise. "But we don't put them into any such corner, for we are so shy we stay away from them. "We dress in dark colors, though we like to wear bright orange-brown waistcoats with touches of white. "Half way down our tails—at the end part—we like white to be the rat fashion. So it is the rat fashion, for the last half of our tails will be found to be white. "My whiskers are very fine, too. It is splendid to have whiskers. It lends style to my rat appearance. "Of course, we have relatives who dress a little differently. "They don't care for our color scheme, but that doesn't bother us. "Now, I must join Mr. Water Rat Neighbors' Evening Splashing party. "Ah, I can hear them now joining in the Great Rat Splashing chorus." So Mr. Water Rat hurried along and joined the others in the Great Rat Splashing chorus, which went like this:

To be a rat Is something that All creatures cannot be. Perhaps they're glad, But we're not and that Water rats are we. We splash and play— Not in the day— It's night when us you see. But maybe you Find you can't do This thing so easily. For we're so shy From you we'd fly; Perhaps that pleases thee! But to be a rat Is something that All creatures cannot be!

"We Love the Water."

Good Ball Game

Any number of children can play this game, all that is needed is a ball. The players stand in a circle equal distances apart and throw the ball from one to the other around the circle as rapidly as possible. If a child misses the ball he must remain in the position in which he dropped the ball. The "statue" must remain thus until the last person to miss has thrown the ball into the air and caught it ten times. It is lots of fun to see who can stand still the longest, indeed some of the attitudes of the players are so funny that the other statues almost lose their balance laughing at them. Try this game and see what good sport it is.

New Kinds of Teeth

Robert had never seen gold-filled teeth until his Aunt Fanny came to visit the family. He admired her teeth very much, and expressed his admiration by saying: "Mother, when I get big, may I have copper-toed teeth like auntie's?"

Giants of Old

It is impossible to give the height of "the tallest giant ever known on earth." One skeleton unearthed in Laverne is said to have measured 17 feet. Another, in Crete, is stated to have been 20 feet; another, found in Seldy, "if human," makes the original owner to have been 300 feet tall.

Poor health makes you nervous, irritable and may be despondent; it makes any one so. But hundreds of women claim that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, by restoring health to the kidneys, proved to be just the remedy needed to overcome such conditions. Helpful Advice to Overworked Women Mrs. C. E. Chapman 1920 Elm St., New Albany, Ind. DAY in and day out, week in and week out the tired, over-worked housewife and mother toils on, sweeping, dusting, cooking, cleaning and mending. Is it any wonder that after a time a weakness, such as Mrs. Chapman had, develops and the wife and mother pays a toll in physical weakness and pain for her efforts of love, the natural result of overwork? Women who find themselves afflicted with weakness, pain, headaches, backache, nervousness, irritability and melancholia will be interested in Mrs. Chapman's letter, and should realize that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is especially adapted to overcome such conditions. Mrs. Chapman's Letter Reads as Follows: NEW ALBANY, IND.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for a weakness which many women have from over work, and from which I suffered for quite a while. I wasn't fit to do my work and my sister advised me to take this medicine. After the first few days the pains were not so severe as they had been and after taking a few bottles I am not bothered any more. I am doing my housework every day and highly recommend the Vegetable Compound to any woman suffering from female trouble. Only yesterday a friend called me on the phone and knowing what it did for me wanted to know what to ask for at the drug-store, as she meant to give it a trial."—MRS. C. E. CHAPMAN, 1920 Elm Street, New Albany, Indiana. Another Case of Nervous Breakdown MEMPHIS, TENN.—"Two years ago I was completely run-down and my nerves were a wreck. I could not sweep a room without resting. I could not do any of my work except a little at a time and the doctor's medicine did not help me. One day some one threw a little book on to my porch and in it I read several testimonials of women who had been like myself. I went right out and got me a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and before I had taken the whole of that bottle I knew it was helping me. I took six bottles and then in about three months I took two more. Now I am in perfect health. I do all my own work and could do more. I can truly say that I know Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound gave me my health."—MRS. O. J. HANCKLEY, 415 E. Georgia St., Memphis, Tenn. Thousands of Women owe their health to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound LYDIA E. PINKHAM MEDICINE CO., LYNN, MASS.

Many Things Have Been Subject to Tax Levies

Carriages were the first subject of a tax levy by the federal government, according to the researches of the congressional library. Snuff and refined sugar came next, followed by sales at auction. By 1813 retailers of liquor were made a source of governmental revenue, and retailers of foreign merchandise as well. In 1815 manufactured iron, candles, hats, umbrellas, and shoes, were taxed along with playing cards. Coal, paint, cement, marine engines, and screws were among the articles upon which the government levied in the days of the Civil war. In these times, contractors, architects, civil engineers and contractors had to settle with the collector of internal revenue. Before the war ended, lawyers, physicians and dentists had been added to the list and about every one else, including all manufacturers.

Satire on Novel Reading

Such was the popularity of novel-reading in England about the mid-eighteenth century that it was viewed with alarm by the intellectuals and was satirized in a farce called "Polly Honeycomb," attributed to Garrick.

When doctors disagree they can always unite in attributing it to heart failure.

Boy Scout Saved Brother. Just as his seven-year-old brother who had fallen through the ice on a pond near Kalamazoo, Mich., was being drawn under the surface by the current, fourteen-year-old Scout Carl Johnson, at peril of his own life, plunged into the icy water and, securing a hold on the little fellow, pulled him to safety. The scout then extricated himself from the water's grip and the broken hole, and promptly hustled his small brother home to recuperate from the ice bath. Not Well Since Three Years Old Catarrh of the Ear Neighbor Recommended PE-RU-NA. The experience of Mrs. J. C. Dacus, 1621 Booker St., Little Rock, Ark., was not an unusual one. It was in fact a repetition of what has happened in thousands upon thousands of instances. She had a running condition of the ear from the time she was three years old. In spite of treatment it persisted and became very offensive. One day a neighbor recommended Pe-ru-na and La-cu-pia which had relieved his wife of the same trouble. Mrs. Dacus used three bottles of each of these quick acting remedies and reports that the discharge and offensive odor are both gone. Her disease was one of the very many forms taken by Catarrh and is known as chronic Otitis. Wherever the catarrhal condition is located Pe-ru-na reaches it. May be purchased any place in tablet or liquid form.

Bees Darken Beacon. Swarms of bees recently swept off-shore by the wind in a storm, made their landing on the huge lamp of the South-West lighthouse of New Haven, Conn. So thick were the bees, says an eyewitness, that they covered the lens area of the beacon and obscured the light that guides mariners in Long Island sound.

Noise That Annoys Not. Liege is, at this time of the year, the center of a sport which has no followers elsewhere. Attending cock-crowing competitions is one of the ways in which the Belgian artisan spends part of his leisure. Special roosters are bred for these contests, and that which outcrows his fellows is adjudged the winner. The roosters are placed in cages, each of which is set an inch or so from its neighbors. This proximity, it seems, produces that spirit of rivalry without which the affair would fall flat. A marker is appointed for each bird, his job being to note the number of crows made. As a rule a match lasts an hour.

Removing Rust Spots. Rust spots on metal should be rubbed with a cork that has been dipped in paraffin. A cork moistened with paraffin is also splendid for removing marks from hearth tiles. Every man is great just because he is a man.

MIDDY AND BLOOMER SUIT; SILVER ADDS PRETTY TOUCH

THREE cheers for vacation time! Into schoolroom and office drift daydreams of forthcoming fun, frolic and freedom. As a prologue to this prospective season of joy unalloyed, our present moments have resolved themselves into a strenuous program of "clothes" preparation and planning for the outing. A costume for every occasion as fashion would have it is indeed no easy task to accomplish. To be sure, there must be party dresses, afternoon frocks and such, but when it comes to sensible dress of solid comfort for hours spent in the great outdoors where there is no room for a middy and bloomer suit? Every liker knows the satisfaction of being suitably outfitted in practical khaki togs which are proof against wind, rain, weather and blizzard. However, just because a khaki suit is practical does not mean that style and attractive appearance must be sacrificed. No indeed! The picture herewith is a direct contradiction to any such inference. It is most carefully styled, with perfected detail achieved in the deep shapely yoke, the long well-fitting sleeves, the becoming sailor collar and large silk utility tie. Among the sports apparel, which is of a paramount interest for approaching week-end and vacation holidays, are handsome costume shown in the accompanying picture. Not only is this two-piece costume more than satisfying from an esthetic viewpoint, but that all important term "style" may unqualifiedly be applied to it. It is the novel saque-like cut of the blouse which entitles this model to its claim of unusual style distinction. These new, straight coat lines are the latest word in fashion. The idea is also featured in very long tunic-sleeves, in some of the newer modes. It contemplates the purchase of an afternoon frock, or if planning to amuse one's own gown at home, keep in mind that the straight saque lines are an up-to-the-minute vogue. There is considerable gold, silver and oriental braid employed in decorative border and bindings, not only on dresses of satin and cloth, but likewise on the stylish long straight-line coats. Especially are the soft fanciful dresses for golf and tennis designed in striped madras with reversed stripes as the only trimming note. These flaunt bright colors against white. Sleeveless modes make striking appeal, the smartest late idea being that of a jacket sans sleeves in bright plaid flannel, worn with a skirt of collars and wide sleeve cuff-borders designed with a plentiful use of tiny gold or silver buttons also in fashion. The blouse shown in this picture is buttoned straight up the front with little silver balls. JULIA BOTTOMLEY. (© 1924, Western Newspaper Union)

The KITCHEN CABINET

A home based on right principles will be simple. No ostentation or extravagance beyond one means, simplicity in entertainment, in offering freely of what one has to friends, without apology or explanation. FILL THE COOKY JAR No child will ever forget the delight of grandmother's cookie jar, and even the older ones enjoy a crisp, tasty cookie with a cup of tea. In most families the cherished recipes are handed down from mother to daughter. Here are a few that are good and worth saving: White Cookies.—Take two cups of sugar, one cup of shortening, mix and cream well, then add two well-beaten eggs and a cupful of milk; a grated lemon rind or a tiffing for flavoring may be used. Stir four teaspoonfuls of baking powder with two cups of flour, add alternately with the milk and when well blended set on ice for an hour or two to become stiff. Roll out, adding as little flour as possible; sprinkle with sugar as the cookies go into the oven. Hermits.—To one cupful of thick sour cream add two cups of brown sugar, one cupful of chopped raisins, two-thirds of a cupful of butter, two well-beaten eggs, one teaspoonful each of soda, cinnamon, cloves and nutmeg, and stir with flour to make a stiff dough. Drop by teaspoonfuls on a baking sheet, add a nut or raisin on top of each and bake in a moderate oven. Soft Molasses Cookies.—Take one-half cupful of shortening, two cups of molasses, and put over the heat. When the boiling point is reached add one teaspoonful each of cinnamon and ginger, stir well and remove from the heat. Add one beaten egg, one cupful of sour milk and one teaspoonful of soda. Beat well and add about four cupfuls of flour and drop from a spoon on a baking sheet. One may add different spices, nuts and fruit to the above recipe, making a different tasting cookie. Aunt O's Cookies.—Take one cupful each of butter and sugar, two eggs well beaten, one-half cupful of milk, nutmeg to taste and three teaspoonfuls of baking powder add flour to roll. Roll, cut and sprinkle with sugar. Bake in a hot oven. Mutton en Casserole.—Cut a pound (more or less) of mutton cut from the shoulder into serving-sized pieces. Brown in a little fat, add salt and pepper and dredge with flour. Cover with boiling water and one cupful each of fresh carrots cut into cubes and one of peas, with one small onion. Cover and place in a hot oven to cook for three hours. Serve from the casserole. Roast Leg of Lamb.—Rub the leg of lamb well with salt, pepper and a sweet fat. Place in the roasting pan and sear it well in a hot oven. Now add one-half cupful of water, one cupful of tomato, one onion, six peeled potatoes and roast with the lamb. Baste occasionally and serve with the gravy in the pan. Mutton Stew.—Take a neck piece and put on to cook in boiling water to cover with one small onion. Simmer until tender, then add a can of peas, thicken the gravy and serve the peas and gravy around the meat. Season well while the meat is cooking. Barbecued Lamb.—Take cold roast of lamb, cut into slices and reheat in the following sauce: Take two tablespoonfuls of butter, one-half tablespoonful of vinegar, one-third of a cupful of currant jelly and one-fourth teaspoonful of mustard. Cook until the lamb is well-heated and seasoned. Chicken Pie.—Cook the chicken as usual, stewing with an onion or clove of garlic. Lay the chicken well-seasoned in the baking dish, removing the onion. Cover with broth and place baking powder biscuit closely over the top. Just before serving add a cupful of good rich cream to the broth in the dish. Combination Soup.—Put one cupful of lentils, one-half cupful of barley, one onion, two cloves, one grated carrot into a saucepan; simmer for two hours, add salt and pepper to taste. The onion should be struck with the cloves and removed, then add a pint of milk and four tablespoonfuls of butter. Serve at once. Move Old Windmill A century-old windmill has been moved in sections from its old site near Alderburgh, England, to another three miles inland, where it is being re-erected. It will be used to pump water into a storage tank with a capacity of 20,000 gallons, which is in course of construction. Quebec Planting Trees A contract for planting 10,000 trees on the Montreal-Quebec highway was awarded to a Polette nursery by the provincial department of highways and roads. Half of these trees were to be planted this spring and the other half next fall. This number is in addition to the 2,000 trees to be planted by the lands and forest department for the account of the roads department. A total of 200,000 plants will be necessary to improve the scenery along the principal highways in the western section of the province.

ZEN OF THE Y. D.

A Novel of the Foothills

"I know what you mean," she said. "There's too much severity in it. And not one may pay these courtesies and be served. I always 'aird' your father, and he knew I did it because I wanted to, not because I had to. And I shall do the same with you once we understand each other."

"I think we can accept that as a working basis," he agreed.

"She produced notebook and pencil. 'Very well, sir. Do you wish to dictate?'

Grant found a little apartment house on a side street, overlooking the lake. Here was a place where the vision could leap out without being beaten back by barricades of stone and brick. He rested his eyes on the distance, and assured the investigator laudably that the rooms would do, and he would arrange for decorating at his own expense.

As he was arranging the books on his shelf a clipping with the account of Zen's wedding fell to the floor. He sat down in his chair and read it slowly through. Later he went out for a walk.

It was in his long walks that Grant found the only real comfort of his new life. To be sure, it was not like roaming the foothills; there was not the soft breath of the Clinok, nor the deep silence of the mighty valleys. But there was movement and freedom and a chance to think. The city offered artificial attractions in which the foothills had not competed; faintly kept parks and lawns; splashes of perfume and color; spraying fountains and vagrant strains of music. He reflected that some merciful principle of compensation has made no place quite perfect and no place entirely undesirable. He remembered also the toll of his life in the saddle, the physical hardship, the strain of long hours and broken weather. And here, too, in a different way, he was in the saddle, and he did not know which strain was the greater. He was beginning to have a higher regard for the men in the saddle of business. The world saw only their success, or, it may be, their pretense of success. But there was a different story from all that, which each one of them could have told for himself.

On this evening when his mind had been suddenly turned into old channels by the finding of the newspaper clipping dealing with the wedding of Y. D.'s daughter, Grant walked far into the outskirts of the city, paying little attention to his course. It was late October; the leaves lay thick on the sidewalks and through the parks; there was in all the air that strange, sad, sweet drowsiness of the dying summer. Grant had tried bitterly to keep his thoughts away from Transley's wife. The past had come back on him, had rather engulfed him, in that little newspaper clipping. He let himself wonder where she was, and whether nearly a year of married life had shown her the folly of her decision. He took it for granted that her decision had been folly, and he arrived at that position without any reflection upon Transley. Only—Zen had been in love with him, with him, Donnison Grant! Sooner or later she must discover the tragedy of that fact, and yet he told himself he was big enough to hope she might never discover it. It would be best that she should forget him, as he had almost forgotten her. There was no doubt that would be best. And yet there was a delightful sadness in thinking of her still, and hoping that some day—He was never able to complete the thought.

"Oh, Miss Bruce, I Beg Your Pardon. I Am Glad to See You."

He had been walking down a street of modest homes; the bare trees grooped into a sky clear and blue with the first chill presence of winter. A quick step fell unheeded by his side; the girl passed, hesitated, then turned and spoke.

"You are preoccupied, Mr. Grant."

"Oh, Miss Bruce, I beg your pardon. I am glad to see you." Even at that moment he had been thinking of Zen, and perhaps he put more cordiality into his words than he intended. But he had grown up here, with considerable regard, on her own account, for this unusual girl who was not afraid of him. He had found that she was what he called "a good head." She could take a detached view; she was absolutely fair; she was not easily flustered.

Her step had fallen into swing with his.

"You do not often visit our part of the city," she eased.

"You live here?"

"Nearby. What you come to see?"

He turned with her at a corner, and they went up a narrow street lying steep in dead leaves. Friendly domes-the glimpses could be caught through unblinded windows.

"This is our home," she said, stop ping before a little gate. Grant's eye followed the pathway to a cottage set back among the trees. "I live here with my sister and brother and mother. Father is dead," she went on hurriedly, as though wishing to place before him a quick digest of the family affairs, "and we keep up the home by living on with mother as boarders; that is, Grace and I do. Hubert is still in high school. Won't you come in?"

He followed her up the path and into a little hall, lighted only by a chance ray falling through a half-opened door. She did not switch on a comfortable sense of her nervousness, quite distinct from any office experience, as she took his hat. In the living-room her mother received him with visible surprise. She was not old, but widowhood and the cares of a young family had whitened her hair before its time.

"We are glad to see you, Mr. Grant," she said. "It is an unexpected pleasure. Big business men do not often—"

"Mr. Grant is different," her daughter interrupted, lightly. "I found him wandering the streets and I just—retrieved him."

"I think I am different," he admitted, as his eye took in the surroundings, which he appraised quickly as modest comfort, attained through many little economies and makeshifts. "Phyllis is a great help to me—and Grace," the mother observed. "I hope she is a good girl in the office."

At this moment Grace and Hubert came in from the picture-show together, and the conversation turned to lighter topics. Mrs. Bruce insisted on serving tea and cake, and when Grant found that he must go Phyllis accompanied him to the gate.

"This all seems so funny," she was saying. "You are a very remarkable man."

"I think I once passed a similar opinion about you."

She extended her hand, and he held it for a moment. "I have not changed my first opinion," he said, as he released her fingers and turned quickly down the pavement.

CHAPTER XI

Grant's first visit to the home of his private stenographer was not his last, and the news leaked out, as it is sure to do in such cases. The social set confessed to being on the point of being shocked. Two schools of criticism developed over the five o'clock tea tables; one held that Grant was a gay dog who would settle down and marry in his class when he had had his fling, and the other that Phyllis Bruce was an artful hussy who was quite ready to sell herself for the Grant millions. And there were so many eligible young women on the market, although none of them were described as artful hussies!

Grant's behavior, however, placed him under no cloud in so far as social opportunities were concerned; on the contrary, he found himself being showered with invitations, most of which he managed to decline on the grounds of pressure of business. When such an excuse would have been too transparent he accepted and made the best of it, and he found no lack of encouragement in the one or two incipient amorous flurries which resulted. From such positions he always succeeded in extricating himself, with a quiet smile at the vagaries of life. He had to admit that some of the young women whom he had met had charms of more than passing moment; he might easily enough find himself chasing the rainbow.

But his attention was at once to be turned to very different matters. A stock market, erratic for some days, went suddenly into a paroxysm of grand escape with as little loss as possible for himself and his clients, and after three sleepless nights called his staff together. They crowded into the board-room, curious, apprehensive, almost frightened, and he looked over them with an emotion that was quite new to his experience. Even in the aloofness which their standards had made it necessary for him to adopt there had grown up in his heart, quite unnoted, a tender, sweet foliage of love for these men and women who were a part of his machine. Now, as he looked in their faces he realized how, like little children, they leaned on him—how, like little children, they feared his power and his displeasure—how, perhaps, like little children, they had learned to love him, too. He realized, as he had never done before, that they were children; that here and there in the mass of humanity is one who was born to lead, but the great mass itself must be children always, doing as they are bid.

"My friends," he managed to say, "we suddenly find ourselves in tremendous times. Some of you know my attitude toward this business in which we are engaged. I did not seek it; I tried to avoid it; yet, when the responsibility was forced upon me I accepted that responsibility. I gave up the life I enjoyed, the environment in which I found delight, the friends I loved. Well—our nation is now in a somewhat similar position. It has to go into a business which it did not seek, of which it does not approve, but which fate has thrust upon it. It has to break off the current of its life and turn it into unreamed-of channels, and we, as individuals who make up the nation, must do the same. I have already enlisted, and expect that within a few hours I shall be in uniform. Some of you are single men of military age; you will, I am sure, take similar steps. For the rest—the business will be wound up as soon as possible, so that you may be released for some form of national service. You will all receive three months' salary in lieu of notice. Mr. Murdoch will look after the details. When that has been done my wealth, or such part of it as remains, will be placed at the disposal of the government. If we win it will be well invested in a good cause; if we lose, it would have been lost anyway."

No one knew just how the meeting broke up, but Grant had a confused remembrance of many handshakes and some tears. He was not sure that he had not, perhaps, added one or two to the flow, but they were all tears of friendship and of an emotion born of high resolve.

As he stood in his own office again, trying to get the events of these last few days into some sort of perspective, Phyllis Bruce entered. He motioned dumbly to a chair, but she came and stood by his desk. Her face was very white and her lips trembled with the words she tried to utter.

"I can't go," she managed to say at length.

"Can't go? I don't understand?"

"Hubert has joined," she said.

"Hubert, the boy? Why, he is only in school—"

"He is sixteen, and large for his age. He came home confessing, and saying it was his first lie, and the first important thing he ever did without consulting mother. He said he knew he wouldn't be able to stand it if he told her first."

"Foolish, but heroic," Grant commented. "Be proud of him. It takes more than wisdom to be heroic."

"And Grace is going to England. She was taking nursing, you know, and so gets a preference. We can't all leave mother."

He found it difficult to speak. "You wanted to go to the Front?" he managed.

"Of course; where else?"

Her hand was on the desk; his own slipped over until it closed on it.

"You are a little heroine," he murmured.

"No, I'm not, I'm a little fool to tell you this, but how can I stay—why should I stay—when you are gone?"

She was looking down, but after her confession she raised her eyes to his, and he wondered that he had never known how beautiful she was. He could have taken her in his arms, but something, with the power of invisible chains, held him back. In that strange moment a vision swam before him: a vision of a mountain stream backed by tawny foothills, and a girl as beautiful as ever, this Phyllis, who had wrapped him in her arms. . . .

"We must go and get ready," she said.

When he did not respond she drew herself slowly away. "You will hate me," she said.

"That is impossible," he corrected, quickly. "I am very sorry if I have let you think more than I intended. I care for you very, very much indeed. I care for you so much that I will not let you think I care for you more. Can you understand that?"

"Yes. You love me, but you love some one else."

She was disconcerted by her intuition and the terse frankness with which she stated the case.

"I will take you into my confidence, Phyllis, if I may," he said at length. "Do like you; I did love some one else. And that old attachment is still so strong that it would be hardly fair—it would be hardly fair—"

"Why didn't you marry her?" she demanded.

"Because some one else did."

"Oh!"

Her hands found his this time. "I'm sorry," she said. "Sorry I brought this up—sorry I raised these memories. But now you—who have known—will know—"

"I know—I know," he murmured, raising his fingers to his lips. "Time, they say, is a healer of all wounds. Perhaps—"

"No. It is better that you should forget. Only, I shall see you off; I shall wave my handkerchief to you; I shall smile on you in the crowd. Then—you will forget."

Four years of war add only four years to the life of a man, according to the record in the family Bible, if he happen to spring from stock in which that sacred document is preserved. But four years of war add twenty years to the gray matter behind the eyes—eyes which learn to dream and ponder strangely, and sometimes to shine with a hardness that has no part with youth. When Captain Grant and Sergeant Linder stepped off the train at Grant's old city there was, however, little to suggest the ageing process that commonly went on among the soldiers in the great war. Grant had twice stopped an enemy bullet, but his fine figure and sunburned health now gave no evidence of those experiences. Linder counted himself lucky to carry only an empty satchel.

They had fallen in with each other in France, and the friendship planted in the foothills of the range country had grown, through the strange prunings and graftings of war, into a tree of very solid timber. Linder might have told you of the time his captain found him with his arm crushed under a wrecked piece of artillery, and Grant could have recounted a story of being dragged unconscious out of No Man's Land, but for either to dwell upon these matters only aroused the resentment of the other, and frequently led to exchanges between captain and sergeant totally incompatible with military discipline. They were content to pay tribute to each other, but each to leave his own honors untraded.

"First thing is a place to eat," Grant remarked, when they had been dismissed. Words to shall effect had, indeed, been his first remark upon every suitable opportunity for three months. An appetite which has been four years in the making is not to be satisfied overnight, and Grant, being better fortified financially against the stress of a good meal, sought to be always first to suggest it. Linder accepted the suggestion with the complacency of a man who has been four years on army pay.

"Got any notion what you will do?" said Linder, when the meal was finished.

"Not the slightest. I don't even know whether I'm rich or broke. I suppose if Jones and Murdoch are still alive they will be looking after those details. Doing their best, doubtless, to embarrass me with additional wealth. What are you going to do?"

"Don't know. Maybe go back and work for Transley."

The mention of Transley three Grant's mind back into old chryseis. He had almost forgotten Transley. He told himself he had quite forgotten Zen Transley, but once he knew he lied. That was when they potted him in No Man's Land. As he lay there, waiting . . . he knew he had not forgotten. And he had thought many times of Phyllis Bruce. At first he had written to her, but she had not answered his letters. Evidently she meant him to forget. Nor had she come to the station to welcome him home. Perhaps she did not know. Perhaps—Many things can happen in four years.

Suddenly it occurred to Grant that it might be a good idea to call on Phyllis. He would take Linder along. That would make it less personal. He knew his man well enough to keep his own counsel, and eventually they reached the gate of the Bruce cottage, as though by accident.

"Let's turn in here. I used to know these people. Mother and daughter; very fine folk."

Satisfactory

"So you want to marry my daughter? What is your financial standing?"

"Well, sir, I've figured out every exemption possible; I've had the best legal advice that money would secure; I've done everything I could to dodge it—and I still find that I cannot escape paying an income tax."

"Take her. She's yours."—Boston Transcript.

Kitten No Longer

"What became of that little kitten you had?" asked a visitor of a small boy.

"Why, haven't you heard?"

"No. Was it drowned?"

"No."

"Lost?"

"No."

"Poisoned?"

"No."

"Then what did become of it?" said the visitor.

"It grew up into a cat."

Early Americans Tied to Coast by Need of Salt

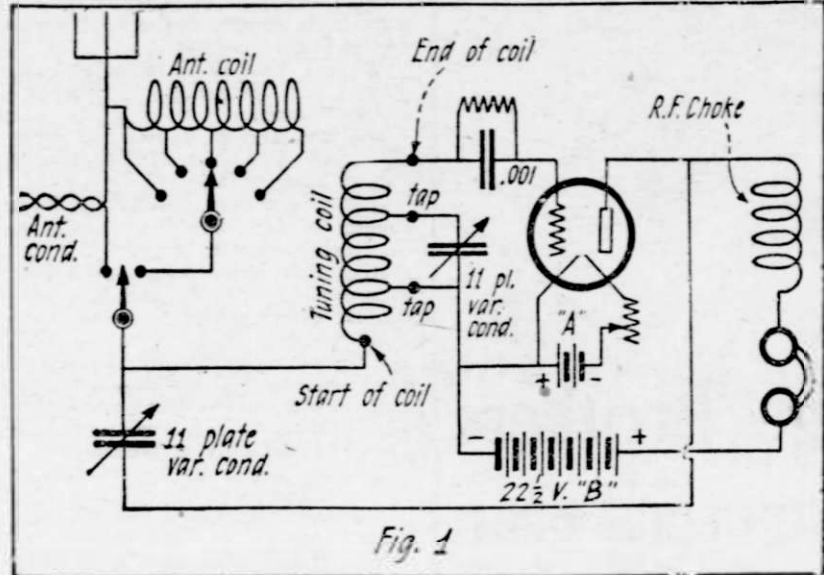

Early American settlers were tied to the coast by the need of salt, without which they could not preserve their meats and live in comfort. Writing in 1752, Bishop Spangenberg says of a colony for which he was seeking lands in North Carolina: "They will require salt and other necessities which they can neither manufacture nor raise. Either they must go to Charleston, which is 300 miles distant, or else go to Boling's Point, in Virginia, on a branch of the James and also 300 miles from here, or else they must go down the Roanoke—I know not how many miles—where salt is brought up from Cape Fear."

An annual pilgrimage for salt thus became essential. Taking furs and game, the early settlers sent their pack trains after seeing them each year to the coast. But when discovery was made of the salt springs of the Kanawha and the Holston and the Kentucky and central New York, the West began to be freed from dependence on the coast. It was in part the effect of finding these salt springs that enabled settlement to cross the mountains.—Detroit News.

Circuit Diagram of Reinartz All-Wave Tuner. This is Similar to the Original Reinartz Circuit but Constitutes a Number of Improvements.

The Circuit of the Reinartz All-Wave Tuner in Conjunction With Two-Stage Audio Frequency Amplifier.

By JOHN L. REINARTZ

Now that we have become used to transmitting on the shorter wave bands and have found them worth while, it is proper that we turn our attention to a tuner which will allow us to tune down to these short waves and lower. The future trend in amateur transmission will be down and yet further down in the wave-length scale.

Most of you are familiar with the tuner; therefore, it is not necessary that we go over any part except its application to any of the shorter wave-lengths.

Fig. 1 shows the circuit diagram. You will note the absence of the plate coil and the addition of a coil in the antenna, which is for the purpose of detuning the antenna circuit so that its effect on the tuning will be zero. Through this means the tuner can be calibrated before being connected to the antenna and its calibration will remain constant regardless of the size or type of antenna to which it may be connected. The greatest use of any tuner is not only to react to a signal, but also to be capable of calibration. An ordinary-sized drinking glass, which should be smooth of surface so the coil may be slipped off. One that is about 2 1/2 inches in diameter will do.

Wind this with 75 turns of No. 24 d.c.c. wire in jumble fashion. Slip off and wind a few turns of thread around the coil turns so that it will stay whole. If you must have a meter coil, wind it to the equivalent of the one described. Connect it as close to the plate connection on the socket as you can, consistent with good mounting practice. This coil should not be mounted near any of the other coils.

The Detuning Coil—Around the same drinking glass wind, with the same size wire, 50 turns, with a loop at every ten turns for a tap. Again in this case, make the coil in any fashion you desire, as long as it remains the equivalent of the one described. This coil is mounted on the tuner panel near the antenna connection. It is connected to a switch lever with six switch points, the lever being connected to the antenna connection of the tuning coil. The antenna wire is connected to the beginning of the detuning coil, which is connected to the first switch point.

good results. There are a number of good condensers on the market. Always connect the rotary plates to the grounded part of the circuit, and if the condenser used has insulating end plates, use a shield. This is not needed with some of the late types of condensers, as the end plates are a part of the rotating element and are in the grounded part of the circuit, thereby eliminating capacity effects entirely. The variable condenser in the plate circuit must be a good one as far as its resistance is concerned, since it has the plate battery potential across it as applied to the detector tube. If 45 tubes are used, this may amount to 45 volts or more; a bad condenser will, therefore, allow a current flow which in time will run down your "B" batteries. Its size is also 11 plates, although you may deviate from this size if you have a larger one on hand, but do not use one with more than 11 plates for tuning purposes.

The Plate Choke Coil.

Not all of us have the tools needed to make a really neat coil. In most cases good looks do not add to the result value of a coil, therefore take an ordinary-sized drinking glass, which should be smooth of surface so the coil may be slipped off. One that is about 2 1/2 inches in diameter will do.

Wind this with 75 turns of No. 24 d.c.c. wire in jumble fashion. Slip off and wind a few turns of thread around the coil turns so that it will stay whole. If you must have a meter coil, wind it to the equivalent of the one described. Connect it as close to the plate connection on the socket as you can, consistent with good mounting practice. This coil should not be mounted near any of the other coils.

The Detuning Coil—Around the same drinking glass wind, with the same size wire, 50 turns, with a loop at every ten turns for a tap. Again in this case, make the coil in any fashion you desire, as long as it remains the equivalent of the one described. This coil is mounted on the tuner panel near the antenna connection. It is connected to a switch lever with six switch points, the lever being connected to the antenna connection of the tuning coil. The antenna wire is connected to the beginning of the detuning coil, which is connected to the first switch point.

The Tuning Coils.

First we will assume that the required range for tuning is to be 150 to 220 meters, so around the same drinking glass we will wind, with No. 16 double cotton covered wire in jumble fashion five turns, making a three-inch loop for a tap; then we continue with 15 turns, making another loop for a tap; then five more turns and the coil is finished. Slip the coil off the glass and wind a few turns of thread around it and connect the starting end of the coil to binding post No. 1 on the front of the panel; connect the first tap to No. 2, the second to No. 3, and the end of the coil to No. 4. You will notice that there is a 4 to 1 turn ratio of antenna to ground and grid to ground. Maintain this in any other coil you may make. —Radio News.

Use of the Choke.

Passing on to the choke coil in the lead to the plate connection of the detector tube, we have come to an important necessity. This choke is to prevent any radio frequency current from traversing that circuit which is part of the audio frequency connection and is there for the same reason that you place a radio frequency choke coil in your plate connection in a transmitting circuit. The main coil of the circuit has four ends; the start of the coil is the antenna connection, the first tap is the ground connection, the next tap goes to the tuning condenser and the end is connected to the grid condenser. It is apparent that if we provide four binding posts we can change our coil as often as we wish, which will disclose the reason for the term, "All-Wave Tuner." There is no reasonable limit to which you can tune without any other trouble than to change the coil to the one desired for the wave-length range.

This brings us to the tuning condenser. One should bear in mind that this must be a real condenser for

Selecting Proper Wire
an Important Feature

Wire for winding inductances comes in many sizes and different insulations. There are single and double cotton covered wires, usually listed as s.c.c. and d.c.c., respectively. And single and double silk-covered wire—s.s.c. and d.s.c. There is also a wire with an enamel covering. Any of these wires may be used for coils, but with slightly different results.

The enamel-covered wire takes up the least space for a given length, but it also has the disadvantage of having the greatest distributed capacity, which means that a coil of it would not tune sharply. In regard to space, the silk-covered wires come next. The wire is very good, but rather expensive. The wire with cotton covering has the greatest bulk, but is quite cheap and efficient, and most coils are wound with it.

The matter of the double or single covering is one that must be determined by the particular case, depending upon the insulating value, the spacing of the wires and the mechanical strength that is needed.

The size of the wire depends upon its use. In the wire gauge that is used for copper wire, the higher the number the smaller the wire. For coils that are to be inserted in the serial circuit, the size should be preferably between 18 and 22. In the secondary and other circuits, the size may range from 20 to 26. Smaller wire than this would reduce the efficiency.—Radio Digest.

Capacity

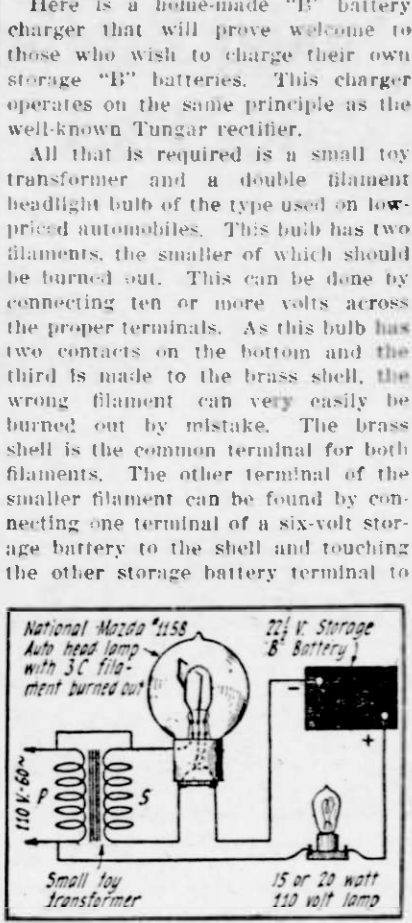

The unit of capacity is the farad. A condenser has a capacity of one farad, when one coulomb of electricity contained in it produces a difference of pressure of one volt. The farad is a very large unit, but rather inconveniently in radio work and the microfarad, or one millionth of a farad, is used.

one and then the other contact on the bottom of the bulb. The filament that burns dimly is the one that should be burned out.

The connections for the charger are clearly shown in the diagram. A 15 or 20-watt lamp is connected in the battery circuit to limit the current flow. A larger lamp should not be used, for then the wire acting as the plate will melt down rapidly, thereby increasing the distance between it and the filament until the rectifier ceases to function. When the charger is operating correctly, the 110-volt lamp will glow dimly. —Radio News.

Charge Battery at Same Time House Lights Used

Whenever there is commercial direct current, it is a very simple matter to charge storage batteries. If the battery is charged directly from the line, a resistance must be used in series to cut down and control the current flow. This resistance usually takes the form of a bank of lamps. But why go to any extra expense to charge the battery? Why not charge it at the same time the house lights are used and thus save money? This is a very simple matter if the scheme shown in the diagram is followed. A fuse block and double pole switch are inserted between the house lights and the line. One fuse is removed and an attachment plug is inserted in its place. The two wires from the plug are run to a S.P.D.T. switch, which is in turn connected to the battery. When the switch is thrown to the left, the battery is out of the circuit and when it is thrown to the right and any lights are being used, all of the current is flowing through the battery and charges it at the rate of current flow. The lights will be slightly dimmed, as the battery uses part of the current that would ordinarily go to light the lamps. If one 100-watt lamp is being used, the battery is being charged at about one ampere. The battery will consume approximately eight watts, which is deducted from that consumed by the lamp and will consequently cause the lamp to be slightly dimmed, which, however, is no inconvenience, as it is hardly noticeable.

By Using This Scheme Storage Battery Will Always Be Charged.

Capacity Effects

If capacity effect is noticed when the antenna condenser is tuned, reverse your condenser leads. Where a condenser is used in the ground or rotor plates should be connected to the ground. This has a neutralizing effect on the condenser dial and will therefore eliminate some of the squealing noises.

Use a Hydrometer

Strange though it may seem, a great many fans have not bought a hydrometer for use in testing their storage batteries. This is the only instrument that will accurately tell one the condition of the battery. And if the battery is not charged at certain intervals its life is materially shortened. It is an investment, not a luxury, to procure a hydrometer.

Old Plate Batteries

Do not use a new B battery with several old ones, as the new battery will deteriorate very rapidly. Do not purchase cheap B batteries, but rather buy those of recognized standard. Cheap B batteries last but a short time and become noisy very quickly.

Watch Contact on Tubes

Often the contacts underneath the vacuum tubes become corroded and the circuit is not properly completed. It is a good plan to sandpaper the ends of the contacts occasionally, thus keeping them bright and shiny, so that they make perfect electrical contact.

THE above picture shows the Present Brothers sales horse, located near the Ford garage, West Bend, also the likeness of Dave and Ben Present, who own and manage the sales stables. Present Brothers have been in the horse business for the past fifteen years, the senior member of the firm Dave, having started the selling and trading of horses shortly after leaving school, in fact, while still in his early teens. About eight years ago the boys decided that this territory was in need of good outside horses and Dave took a trip to Iowa and purchased a carload of high class farm and draft horses. Today these fine horses are known through Washington, Dodge, Fond du Lac, Sheboygan, Oshkosh and Milwaukee counties because of their high quality and standards. This original purchase of a car of stock has increased steadily until now the firm has a turnover of from four to five hundred head per year. That Present Brothers horses are in a class by themselves can be shown by the fact that during the five years that they spent at their stables at Washington county fair they sold the off first money in all classes, except the heavy and light draft classes in the district every year on the local market. Every animal brought from Iowa must stand the Miller test, which means the animal must be free from disease. Every animal is backed by a written guarantee of satisfaction, and fact only only state the number in the book that give the buyer satisfaction at reasonable prices. A large amount is kept on hand at all times, giving the buyer an excellent assortment to pick from. When in need of horse give Present Brothers a call they'll be satisfied.

It costs less to paint than to repair

A coat of good paint on your barns and other out-buildings costs you a lot less than the repairs you'll have to make if you don't paint in time. Don't let the weather get a chance at your barn—don't let it get bare and dingy looking. Paint now—with Lowe Brothers Barn Paint. It covers and hides better than ordinary paints. That makes it cost less at first. And it holds its color and wears longer too. That makes it cost less in the end.
