WATCH FOR THE "PINK" SPRAY FOR FRUIT TREES

THE TIME—The pink spray should be applied to fruit trees when the blossoms are in bloom and are separated in the clusters but are not yet opened.

THE MATERIALS—The materials to be used are 1 gallon of liquid lime sulphur, 1 pound of arsenate of lead, diluted in 10 gallons of water. The water and the spraying materials should be strained into the tank to prevent trouble with clogging valves and nozzles.

THE "MIST" SPRAY THE ONLY SPRAY—To obtain best results a fine mist should be used with a high pressure pump, driving the spray in the form of mist until every square inch of both sides of the leaves and fruit and twigs is completely coated with a film of the solution. Many failures in spraying are due to a spattering spray carelessly applied.

MORAL—spray thoroughly. THE PESTS CONTROLLED—This spray if thoroughly applied at the right time protects the fruit trees from scabies, scab, brown rot and leaf eating insects such as the appleworm, cankerworm, curculio, and also plant lice. If nicotine sulfate is added to the solution.

SPECIAL—If plant lice are present in sufficient numbers to be harmful, add 1/2 pint of 40% nicotine sulfate solution to each 50 gallons of the spray solution.

If using the dry lime sulphur, follow the directions on the package. Usually about 2 1/2 lbs. of dry lime sulphur are equivalent to 1 gallon of the liquid.

"THE CALL OF THE CANYON"

A company of forty-one Paramount players left Los Angeles, Calif., for Flagstaff, Arizona, where scenes for "The Call of the Canyon", a Zane Grey production, were filmed in the country described in Mr. Grey's novel. This is the second time Paramount has undertaken a trip into uncivilized country during the past few months to get authentic locations for Zane Grey productions. The first trip was for scenes in "The Last Man" which was filmed in the Tomba Basin, Arizona, 200 miles from a railway.

The featured players in the production are Richard Dix, Lois Wilson and Marjorie Daw. Mr. Dix and Miss Wilson also played leading roles in "The Last Man." Heading the supporting cast are Noah Berry, Ricardo Cortez and Fred Huntley. The picture was directed by Victor Fleming. "The Call of the Canyon" will come to the Opera House Sunday, telling the story of a definite phase in current American history following the great war when a wave of jazz swept over the world. Most of the scenes, however, are laid in the mountainous districts of the West. The picture is dramatic, thrilling and immensely appealing.

"HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME"

A hundred pounds is a lot of weight to carry about for ten hours out of every twenty-four and to do that for a period extending over six months becomes even more of a "weighty" matter when one has to do it under the rays of a hot California sun.

Yet that is exactly what Norman Kerry underwent at Universal City, where he had to wear a full suit of armor in the making of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame", which Wallace Worsley directed and in which Lon Chaney is starred.

In using this garment of steel, Kerry first had to don a suit of mail which completely covers all portions of his body and over this he wore heavy breast steel, leg thigh plates. The entire outfit weighs a ton and a half, and to add to his discomfort, the actor's body is kept perfectly rigid by the metal encasement.

Kerry's suit of armor was carefully selected by Percy Poore Sheehan, who supervised his adoption of Victor Hugo's immortal romance and Col. Gordon Mace, technical director, who are both authorities on fifteenth century Paris.

"The Hunchback of Notre Dame" is conceded by those who have seen it in the making, as the biggest screen drama ever made. It cost as well over a million and a quarter dollars, and principal players in the cast, which numbers over three thousand, are Patsy Ruth Miller, Ernest Torrence, Brandon Hurst, Winifred Bryson, Kate Lester, Tully Marshall, Jane Sherman, Harry Van Meter, Gladys Johnson, Raymond Hatton and Nick de Ruiz.

"The Hunchback of Notre Dame" is scheduled to be screened at the Opera House on Wednesday and Thursday, May 6 and 7.

—The sacrament of confirmation will be administered to a large class of children from the St. Bridget's mission and from here by Bishop Joseph G. Pinta of Superior at the Holy Trinity church next Thursday, May 7. Services will be at 10 o'clock a. m. with a large number of priests in attendance.

Something to Think About

By F. A. WALKER

THE LARKS ARE SINGING

THOSE hopeful individuals who keep their gaze on the towers of Utopia, gazing like gold in the far-off dreamy distance, give thought to the golden rule and put its precepts into actual practice, the larks are always singing.

These humans have their trials and difficulties, "never as you said I" but with them all, they manage to wear a smile of content.

They go about their duties, however discouraging they may seem, with a cheerfulness that gives inspiration to the discouraged and fault-finding souls, frequently losing their way and failing in the mire of despair.

They know intuitively when to speak and when to curb their tongues, for they have learned the most difficult of all arts, the art of self-control, which the venerable ages will tell you is the first stepping stone to worldly success and an enduring happiness.

Huge never deserts them even in their darkest hours.

The birds are blissing perch over her head and sing their notes.

The gates of another night is transferred to day, and the trusting disciples move from place to place, confident of their ability to find their way in the maze where the larks are singing and the sky is forever light with glorious sunlight.

The world owes a debt of gratitude to these optimistic people which it never can pay, and who I bring a part of the world, are likewise being quiet and possibly thoughtful of our constantly increasing obligation.

We are too self-centered, too greedy for gain, too faithless.

THE TEACHER

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

FOR half a century, and more, the feet of boys forever wore a pathway to the teacher's door.

Yet fifty years he took his stand, a Latin grammar in his hand, and taught the children of the land.

A general, a great divine, Ten men whose names with luster shine, Learned Latin at that simple shrine.

For often here the great began To dream, to wish, to hope, to plan; Today is born tomorrow's man.

And so the teacher grew to gray; Yes, fifty years have passed away When someone happens on a day

To pause before the teacher's door, The threshold that the children wore A half a century or more,

And asks, as that good man appears: "Are you not weary, tired to tears, Of teaching Latin all the years?"

A simple answer he employs To tell a teacher's boy joys: "I don't teach Latin—I teach boys."

God bless the teacher who can look ahead, beyond, the open book, The one who teaching undertook.

Not merely for the Latin's sake But for the boy chance to make Tomorrow's man, a man to wake;

When nothing vearies, nought annoys, Not gladdly all his life employs, But teaching Latin—teaching boys. (© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

FAVORITE FRUIT DISHES

Luscious Basket of Fruit
A LUSCIOUS basket of fruit garnished when possible with its own leaves, is an ornament to any table. Next to taste and palatability, we like to have our food appeal to the eye. Food nicely served and daintily garnished will be much more appetizing than that which is served carelessly.

Salpicon of Fruit.
Shred pineapple, add a banana or two cut fine, an orange and a grapefruit broken into bits. Mix with a cupful of sugar and a tablespoonful of water, boiled together until it thickens; add a tablespoonful of lemon juice, and when cool pour over the fruit. Serve chilled in tall glasses and garnish with a cherry. For those who cannot eat uncooked apples or pears, here is a dainty dish: Stew the fruit in a rich syrup until tender enough to piece easily, then decorate with quartered blanched almonds, dust with powdered sugar and return to the oven to finish cooking. Pour the syrup around them and use to baste the apples during the cooking. Serve with whipped cream and the thick rich syrup. If pears are used add a little lemon juice to the syrup.

Cored apples filled with nuts and macerated, covered with a meringue is an attractive way of serving such fruit.

Grated apple added to the white of an egg and powdered sugar and beaten until stiff makes a delicious dessert. Serve garnished with cubes of bright-colored jelly.

Peaches put through a sieve added to plain almond-flavored ice cream are delicious.

Halves of ripe peaches, filled with chopped nuts, heaped with sweetened and flavored whipped cream are very good. Canned peaches may be used, placing one-half on rounds of sponge cake, with plenty of the fruit juice. Serve with cream.

ASTOLD BY Irvin S. Cobb

FIXING BLAME AT ITS SOURCE

THIS little story has one merit, at least. Of my own personal knowledge I can testify that it is true.

A tired business man in New York, coming home after a particularly enervating day, had occasion, or thought he had, to speak sharp words of reproach to his eight-year-old son. He wound up by sending the youngster to bed with the youngster's room to see whether he had fallen asleep, his mother found him wide awake and very scornful of her advances.

"Why, Jackie," she said, "you shouldn't be surly toward me just because your father scolded you. I'm not to blame."

"Yes, you are too!" stated Jackie. "You married the big stiff, and now I got to stand for him!"

SCHOOL DAYS

Your Last Name

IS IT HERRICK?

THIS name has been traced to a first name used in Anglo-Saxon days—Herrick, which is connected with Eric and also with Richard, both coming from a word meaning king or prince.

One thing is certain and that is that Herrick is thoroughly English and that it is a very old surname. In this country the Herricks were among the early settlers. Henry Herrick, a native of Leicester, England, settled in Salem in 1629. He was the son of Sir William Herrick of Boston, Mayor, Leicester. The name seems to be most usual in Leicestershire, England, which was apparently the cradle of the Herricks, and the name is spelled in countless different ways in the old records there. Herricke and Heyrick were usually employed methods in old days and are still used by some of the English families.

Among the distinguished descendants of Henry Herrick, the colonist, were John Herrick, educator, who was president of the University of South Dakota and the Pacific University of Oregon; D. Cady Herrick, prominent jurist; Ebenezer, who was representative from Maine at Washington before the Civil War; Joshua H. also Maine representative; and Samuel Herrick, representative from New York.

In England there was an interesting old family of goldsmiths of the name. Sometimes they spelled it Herricke, sometimes Herrick and sometimes Herrick. Sir William Herrick or Heyrick, born in 1622, was the fifth son of John Heyrick or Ericrick of Leicester, who undoubtedly belonged to the same connection to which the colonist, Henry Herrick, belonged. Sir William Herrick was a money lender who won favor with kings and nobles. ... son of his named Richard Herrick, born in 1608, was warden of Manchester Collegiate church, and a nephew was Sir Robert Herrick, born in 1591, well-known English poet. His father was Nicholas Herrick, brother of Sir William Herrick, also a goldsmith.

The poet, Herrick, a contemporary of Shakespeare, wrote some charming songs. Among them are:

"Father 'e reaches white ye may, Old time is still a-flying, —and

"Cherry ripe, ripe, ripe, I cry, Fruit and fair ones—come and buy!"

Tested Methods of Improvement

Need for Better Live Stock Is Brought to Fore in Recent Bulletin.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

With all that has been printed and said about the economic value of improved live stock and with the number and size of our fairs and shows devoted largely to the display of animal excellence, the casual observer may conclude that a large proportion of our domestic live stock is now pure bred or at least well bred. The facts, however, lead to another conclusion.

Need for Improvement

The need for improving live stock in this country is brought to the fore in a recent publication of the United States Department of Agriculture, Miscellaneous Circular 33, "Some Tested Methods of Live-Stock Improvement," by D. S. Burch of the bureau of animal industry. The circular says that this need is apparent on almost every hand, and sets out to help meet this need by outlining various methods for bringing about more widespread use of superior breeding animals.

Among the methods described as having been useful in bringing about improvement are the better sires, better stock plan, boys' and girls' clubs, demonstrations, exhibits, scrub sire trials, breeders' associations, cow-testing associations, co-operative bull associations, stallion registry, government horse-breeding activities, ton-liter contest, thousand-pound calf clubs, ram rings, poultry improvement activities and legislation. Considerable detail is given in the circular concerning the ways these various methods have been used and some of the results which have been obtained.

In a foreword to the circular, Dr. John H. Mohler, chief of the bureau of animal industry, says, "The widespread use of inferior male breeding animals has been for many years a cause of low production per animal and of needlessly poor quality. The continuance of such conditions is uneconomical and unnecessary. The direct and practical means of improvement is to use breeding animals, especially sires, which are true representatives of breeds developed for a definite, useful purpose.

Become National Movement

"Live-stock improvement," he says, "has proved very popular, not only with those who produce the animals, but with those who help to market them and those who use their products. Indeed, it has become a national movement. It adds to the prosperity of the entire community and increases the palatability of our meats. A sound method that is capable of increasing the returns of farmers in a single county by $100,000 needs but a fair trial. Let us hasten such improvement wherever live stock are kept."

Copies of the circular may be had free by addressing the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington.

Help to Farmer to Know the Cost of His Silage

Farmers have to choose rations so as to get the most for their money. It is, therefore, a help to the farmer to know the cost of his silage, just as he knows the price of the corn, hay and supplements that he feeds. With a view of supplying this kind of knowledge the Missouri College of Agriculture last year kept cost records on all the items involved in filling ten silos. The figures showed that the average cost per ton of corn silage in 1924 on the farms considered was $5.90 per ton. The items and their total, figured at prices current in 1924, are reported by B. H. Frazer, farm management accountant at the college, as follows:

Copper Carbonate Will Prevent Smut on Oats

The copper carbonate treatment for smut may be applied to hull-less oats in the same manner as for wheat. To apply the treatment mix from two to four ounces of the copper carbonate thoroughly with each bushel of grain. Pour it back and forth between two tubs or milk cans to cover each seed with the dust. Use no water and plant any time without further care. A barrel or box may be rigged up to rotate like a barrel churn that will mix the seed thoroughly and the work may be done easier and more rapidly. The formaldehyde treatment may also be used on the hull-less variety in the same manner as with the hulled oats.

Raise More Tomatoes

They say that "an apple a day keeps the doctor away," but a tomato crop failure would be even more unfortunate than an apple famine, from the standpoint of health. The tomato has been called the "poor man's orange," as it rivals that fruit in providing vitamins. Every garden should have plenty of tomatoes; allow 20 plants for each member of the family—more if the plants are staked. This will give an ample supply for use during the summer for canning.

When Horse Coughs

When a horse coughs the cause must be removed. Any sort of irritation or inflammation affecting the breathing apparatus of a horse will cause coughing and there are all kinds of things that will cause that. Diseases, dusty feed, gases from manure when stable is poorly ventilated, and many other things may predispose a cough. Regular cough syrup for horses or glycerol in one-ounce doses two or three times per day will usually give relief.

Abortion Control Measures Studied

Baffling Disease Has Caused Heavy Losses.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Methods of controlling infectious abortion of cattle at the federal experiment station, Bethesda, Md., and on farms placed at the service of the station, continue to be a major veterinary study of the bureau of animal industry, United States Department of Agriculture. This baffling disease has caused heavy losses to cattle owners.

The report of the chief of the bureau, recently issued, points out the necessity for thoroughness in dealing with contagious abortion. Reasonably simple and practicable control measures have proved very encouraging and valuable in a herd of several hundred pure-bred cattle whose owner cooperated with the federal investigators in the work.

"But another herd," the report states, "which had been under supervision for several years illustrates conclusively that specific disease-control measures are not effective unless they are consistently applied. An occasional failure to do the several things necessary to prevent the introduction or dissemination of disease germs may cause the loss of the benefits derived from months or years of careful work."

Measures recommended for controlling the disease include the proper disposal of infectious substances eliminated by the affected animal and the use and thorough disinfection of maternity stalls. Much work was done last year with the serological test as a diagnostic agent of the disease. Results thus far indicate that an animal which has been removed from all sources of infection for from five to six weeks and which does not react to the test above a certain measurable degree may be regarded as safe so far as the dissemination of abortion germs is concerned. The work is being continued, but, owing to its technical nature, much time is required to reach and confirm results.

Manure Hauled Directly to Field Is Best Plan

The value of manure depends upon many things—the percentage of straw and moisture, the treatment it has received, the length of time held, the kind of crops it is to be used upon, and how it is applied. But in a general way, the Maryland station has arrived at the conclusion that a ton of manure for field crops is worth around $5.28 and for truck crops $8.05. The conclusions were arrived at after 21 years of tests.

They discovered other interesting information about manure. Light applications usually give larger returns from a ton of manure than do heavy applications. Where the supply of manure is limited it is better practice to make several light applications than a few heavy ones. Manure hauled directly to the field and spread gave better results than where hauled out and allowed to rot in piles. Manure applied to soil that has been limed, gave larger returns than on unlimed land. The addition of phosphorus also increased the efficiency of manure.

Place Perennial Plants Along the Garden Fence

Rhubarb and asparagus will thrive well along the garden fence. These plants should be purchased from the nursery and planted early. Strawberries make a valuable addition to any garden and produce the earliest home-grown fruit. Senator Dunlap, which is a vigorous grower, ripens in mid-season, and will withstand drought better than many varieties.

A row of raspberries or blackberries will fit in along one side of the garden. Cumberland or Black Pearl are two good varieties of black raspberries. Of the blackberries, Early Harvest will probably be more successful than the later varieties because it ripens before the dry part of the summer.

FARM NOTES

Plant Dwarf Essex rape for pasture.

Repair pasture fences before busy season.

Oats should not follow grass in crop rotations.

Buying imported clover seed is likely to be an unprofitable form of gambling.

The best hen is the one that eats the most and turns the food into the form of eggs.

Reliable dealers guarantee seeds true to name and will tell the probable proportions that will grow.

Onions grown from the seed make the best storage onions for winter use, as those that develop from sets do not keep well.

Rhubarb furnishes early green food in the spring, and there should be a few plants in every garden. Too often it is neglected and allowed to grow without care or attention.

Onion sets may be planted as early in the spring as the ground can be put in proper condition. They should be planted about three inches apart in rows from one to two feet apart.

For the overhauling of farm machinery, clean and inspect the machine to find what is needed. Order parts to be replaced, repair parts not to be replaced, and, lastly, assemble the whole.

Onion seed should be planted as early in the spring as soil conditions will allow or they may be planted in a hotbed and later transplanted to the garden about three inches apart in rows.

A Common Sense Planter

ONE of the things you'll like best about the International corn planter is the practical, common sense way it goes about its work.

When you see it in action, you note the accuracy with which the kernels are dropped, how they are all placed in the bottom of the furrow, how easy it is to adjust the tongue for teams of different heights, keeping the boots level and making the hills easy to cross cultivate.

This planter can also be set to drop full hills without the use of a check wire by the addition of a simple power drop attachment. The change from checking to drilling can be made at any time by pressing down a small foot lever. Fertilizer attachments if you want them.

These are features that make a corn planter valuable and desirable. There are other good features too, that we can show you if you will come in and see us before you buy your corn planter this year.

HINDENBURG WINS GERMAN ELECTION

Field Marshal Is Declared Elected by Majority of 900,000.

Berlin—Field Marshal Paul von Hindenburg, candidate of the Nationalist-Monarchist bloc, was officially declared elected President of Germany over former Chancellor Wilhelm Marx by a plurality of about 900,000 votes.

The vote was as follows: Von Hindenburg, 14,600,000; Marx, 13,700,000; Ernst Thälmann, Communist, 1,900,000.

Had the Communists chosen to support the Republican candidate instead of splitting the Republican vote, Hindenburg's defeat would have been accomplished without much difficulty, thus the Weimar bloc leaders blamed the Communists for their defeat.

Hindenburg carried the greater part of Bavaria, and he also did much better in the southern part of Germany than was expected. This, with the support given him in East Prussia, as well as the northern part of the country, gave him the victory.

Despite the rain prevailing over the greater part of the country, a heavy vote was cast, equalling that of the December Reichstag election.

The returns show that some 8,000,000 voters who failed to cast their ballots in the first Presidential contest on March 29, when the total was 28,000,000, on Sunday voted for Hindenburg, being unable to withstand the magic lure of the marshal's name.

Among the votes the marshal received were those of the entire Hohenzollern family. The former crown prince and his wife voted at Oels, while the rest of the former Kaiser's sons cast their votes at Potsdam, where they live.

Three are dead, one dying, and more than 100 persons wounded in election riots which featured the poll. Two were killed and two seriously wounded in Karlsruhe and one was killed and one is dying in Berlin.

Hog Rates Go Lower; Cattle Trade Erratic

Chicago Union Stockyards.—For week ending April 24.—The future course of the fat steer market remained unimpaired, trade during the week ended April 24 being another erratic affair.

Approximately one-half of the 50,000 cattle which arrived at Chicago hit the market on the initial day of the week, inducing declines of $2 to $4 on fat steers, mostly $2c.

At the low end strictly choice weighty steers topped at $10.55 and a narrow spread of $9.75 to $10.75 took practically everything to the steer. Fine grading good to choice. Vealers striving to new low prices for the season, selling decidedly on a weight basis. Kinds selling under 100 lbs. sold downward to $7.00 this week, while 150 to 175 lbs. handweights were in active demand upward to $10.50.

Increased marketings at Chicago and other live stock centers provided local packers another opportunity to trim some values. Packing now values declined $2c to $3c, these having been reduced sharply in previous trading. Light lights and slaughter pigs generally showed 50c losses.

THREE WORLD FLYERS ARE AWARDED D. S. M.

First Ever to Be Given for Peace-Time Services.

Washington.—Maj. Frederick L. Martin, first commander of the army world flyers' expedition, and First Lieut. Leigh Wade and Leslie P. Arnold, members of that expedition, received the first Distinguished Service medals ever given for military services performed in time of peace.

The presentation ceremonies took place at the War Department and were attended by official representatives of the Army, Navy, State, Treasury, Commerce and Post-Office departments.

By special act of congress the medals were awarded to the eight world flight officers at the time some of their number also were made eligible for promotion in rank, but only Major Martin and the two lieutenants were present to receive the decorations.

Addressing the three fliers, Acting Secretary of War Davis said: "Other Americans have been given Distinguished Service medals for exceptional services during war, but no one has ever been given this medal for services during peace. They are presented to you by the more than 110,000,000 people of the 48 states of this great nation. The award is a most signal honor and, therefore, appropriate for your most signal accomplishment."

The presentation ceremonies took place at the War Department and were attended by official representatives of the Army, Navy, State, Treasury, Commerce and Post-Office departments.

Hindenburg Will Not Let Anybody Dictate to Him

Berlin.—When told of his election to the German Presidency Field Marshal von Hindenburg who is at his home near Hammer, declared: "I do not grant that party strife may at last end. Everything is decided now. Let us hope the people now will learn complete unity, for in union there is strength."

The field marshal remained calm when he was told the news of his victory, but he evinced deep pleasure when the results were read. To a group of election workers the new German President said:

"Let nobody imagine that I will stand for anybody dictating to me. The battle has been fought, and I will reserve to myself the right to stretch out my hand to every German, even to those who have hitherto opposed me, in our common endeavor."

Trust Fund Payments Held Taxable Income

Washington.—The United States Supreme court ruled that payments to a beneficiary of the income of a trust fund created by will can be taxed as income. The decision reversed the Appellate court, which held that E. Palmer Gavitt of New York was entitled to a $80,000 refund on taxes which he had paid under protest.

An imposing array of counsel, including John W. Davis, acting for other big estates affected by the same question, opposed the government in suits filed with the Supreme court.

The court decided that income of a trust fund was "income" and not a "gift."

'BLUES' VICTORS IN U. S. WAR GAME

Fleet Captures Hawaii Despite Desperate Defense by "Black" Army.

Honolulu.—Rear Admiral Coontz and Major General Hines, chief umpires in the United States Pacific war game, called off the contest, with the decision that the "Blacks," or defending forces, were defeated, when the "Blues," or attacking forces, captured and occupied the Hawaiian Islands.

The real lesson of the joint army and navy exercises is that the Hawaiian Islands cannot be defended from an attack by any large power except by the guns of the American navy. To develop this problem, Hawaii was defended only by an army garrison, twenty submarines, six destroyers, and ninety airplanes, as if the American navy were in the Atlantic and unable to reach the scene because the Panama locks had been destroyed by the enemy.

The "Blues" wiped out the "Blacks" through superiority of sea power. The "Blue" victory was achieved in the face of the "Black" superiority in air strength, as the "Blue" had only one-third the number of planes that the "Blacks" had. The "Blacks" were unable to sink or cripple any of the eleven "Blue" battleships from the air.

Part of the "Blue" fleet struck the islands a terrific wallop at 1 a. m., while the battleships West Virginia, Maryland, and Tennessee, executing a diversion, bombarded the west coast of Oahu and the Wymonding made a feint in Mounaui bay, on the south-east coast.

The remaining battleships, under the command of Rear Admiral S. S. Robinson, hurled a hurricane of theoretical shellfire along almost the entire northern coast, clearing the way for a main landing force of 1,500 marines, representing 30,000 men, two hours later.

The "Black" army, under the command of Major General Lewis, expected that the main attack would be in that quarter, but was unable to stem the havoc previously wrought by the battleship fire on the land forces and communications.

The umpires ruled that the "Blues" made a constructive and successful landing, although with severe losses.

Airplanes of both sides were shot down theoretically in successive battles. The "Black" army, under the command of Major General Lewis, expected that the main attack would be in that quarter, but was unable to stem the havoc previously wrought by the battleship fire on the land forces and communications.

Senator Wheeler Found "Not Guilty" of Charges

Great Falls, Mont.—A verdict of "not guilty" and a new baby girl came to Senator Burton K. Wheeler of Montana about the same time.

Five minutes before the jury in Judge Frank Dietrich's court returned a decision that he was innocent of the government's charge that he had accepted a fee to take care of land permit cases for his client, Gordon Campbell, Senator Wheeler received a telegram announcing the arrival of his sixth child. Mrs. Wheeler is in Washington.

This is the fifth round of Wheeler's year-long battle with the Department of Justice. His next will come in Washington, as he and Campbell are under joint indictment of conspiracy there, under much the same evidence as that presented here.

LOOKING IN ON THE LEGISLATURE

Madison.—A five-year program, taking care of the immediate building needs of the University of Wisconsin, virtually has been decided upon following an inspection of the buildings and equipment by the joint finance committee of the state legislature and Senator John E. Cushman, member of the board of regents.

After the inspection, the committee held the needs of the university imperative and that the plan should be started with appropriations beginning with the 1925 budget.

The committee and regent inspected the university library, the chemistry building and Pascon hall. Among other things, it found the library can accommodate about 350 persons at the present time, while the need is for accommodation of 1,000 students.

The visit of the committee is the culmination of a long fight for extension of the university buildings. The committee is expected to report its findings and appropriation in about three weeks, with the general budget allowances for the next biennium.

The budget for all state endeavors is expected to reach the legislative floor in omnibus form as to the general appropriation and in a separate bill as to the university and normal school appropriations.

Monument for State Veterans

Wisconsin will erect a $50,000 monument to its Civil War veterans buried in the National cemetery at Marietta, Ga. If the bill passed by the state legislature last week is signed by Gov. Blaine. The monument, according to the bill, must be made so far as possible from Wisconsin materials and must be designed and erected by citizens of the state. There are 404 Wisconsin soldiers buried in the National cemetery at Marietta. Special ceremonies connected with the erection and unveiling of the monument already are contemplated by Wisconsin officials.

Old Age Pension Bill Passed

Gov. Blaine has received the Garey old age pension bill following its passage by the legislature. Three states have the plan in operation, Pennsylvania, Montana and Colorado, and data has been collected by Senator Garey, which he will submit to the executive in urging the latter's signature to the measure. This bill does not abolish the county poor house, but would turn the poor house into city hospitals for the care of the aged. A pension of $1 a day would be paid to indigent persons over 70 years old.

Less than one-third of the bills introduced at this session have been disposed of and the hope for adjournment of the legislature by June 1 seems to be fading.

Limits Emergency Appropriations

After wrangling for more than three hours over the question of reconsidering the vote by which the state emergency board was organized, the senate passed the emergency bill down to provide three rigid ways in which money can be spent in emergency between legislative sessions, knocked out the limitation clause providing that no money could be so spent in excess of $100,000 and then re-engrossed and passed the bill.

The ways in which the emergency board can spend money are so limited, under the bills, that the $100,000 feature was deemed unnecessary. No money can be spent for emergency purposes unless an urgent need is apparent.

Dancing and all other forms of entertainment for which an admission charge is made and the general public excluded is prohibited in the Severson bill passed by the senate. The bill is aimed at university proms and other functions following reports of drinking by a few of the participants of such parties in the past.

The senate has passed with but one dissenting vote the conservation appropriation bill carrying more than $400,000 in funds to be devoted to the purposes of conservation in Wisconsin in 1925.

By a vote of 47 to 37, the assembly passed the Geraldson bill requiring railroads to equip locomotives of certain weight with automatic stoppers and 44 to 33, the Duncan bill defining strikes in connection with the law forbidding fraudulent advertising for labor.

Whether the excavators were successful in their search or whether the loot was ever deposited in Wisconsin is still a question of debate.

She lit her lamp, but her fingers slipped over the glass, and it fell to the floor with a crash that startled all the echoes in the old building. The smoky wick flared up. Joan turned it down with difficulty until the blaze was extinguished, and staggered to the bed, amazed at her weakness.

She could not keep her eyelids open, and she let them close wearily. But sleep was far from her, and still she listened. And after while an unmistakable sound reached her. Somewhere within the institute she heard a key turn in a lock.

It was the slightest distant sound, but it cut the darkness like a knife. And to her mind, the sound, which might mean nothing, might be, indeed, the key of Lancaster's door, seemed like the snap of a trap.

She slept and could not waken. Or, rather, she did not sleep, could not have slept; yet sleep had paralyzed her limbs and left her brain untouched; and her mind seemed preternaturally acute, so that she felt and saw everything that was happening in the building.

Someone was coming along the passage, as on that night before. The hand was upon the door. Through her closed and paralyzed eyelids Joan yet seemed to see the figure of a man. It was the figure of a man in her hand. It was the revolver which Joan had left upon the little table beside her.

Mrs. Dana stood over her, the weapon aimed at her, while her eyes sought her face.

Was she dreaming? Joan had waited through agony of centuries, and the woman was gone. Once more there was silence everywhere. And still she lay there, helpless, feeling all and knowing all, and that it had been no dream, but the prelude of worse to come.

It was strange, but she did not once picture Lancaster as in danger. It was as if the unchained spirit of evil, impatient to harm him, sought another victim. She waited, it seemed for hours. And the blow fell.

She heard a man's scream of fear, dimmed through her ears distantly, yet she was unable to stir, and it passed into her memory, as of something infinitely long ago. Presently there came the hum of voices, chattering cries, bare feet that ran wildly along the corridor without, hands at her door.

It was Mrs. Fraser's voice. Now, with a mighty effort, Joan shook herself free from the spell. She staggered from the bed and groped her way across the room.

Nobody was at the door now, but when she unlocked it a whirl of smoke burst in. Smoke filled the passage. Upon the floor beneath a woman was screaming. There were voices outside, and the sound of men running along the passages, but Joan could not locate them.

She staggered through the smoke, feeling for the stairs. It blinded her. She fell into a wall, felt a rigid body before her, and perceived dimly Mrs. Dana's face, wearing a look of exaltation.

She had come too far; she had reached the door of Mrs. Dana's room. Through a break in the smoke cloud Joan saw that the door was closed. Behind it someone was hammering. Then Myers' screams broke through the din and confusion. He was hammering against the door, and the strong door, built to resist such pressure, refused to yield. His cries were terrifying. Under the door came little creeping tongues of flame.

Joan caught at Mrs. Dana. "Come with me!" she mumbled. "Come!"

The woman stood rigid as a statue. She felt like marble to the touch, but there was the same exaltation upon her face.

"Open the door!" whispered Joan with her last strength, and pointed.

"Open it! Somebody is locked inside!"

Myers was yelling as Joan had once heard a horse yell, trapped in a burning stable. The wood of the door was smoldering. Joan tried to reach the key. But the rigid body barred her way.

Then she heard her name called through the smoke. At the cry Mrs. Dana snatched the key from the lock and began to run along the corridor. Joan saw her dimly through the enveloping smoke. She staggered, and fell into Lancaster's arms.

That was her last effort. Incapable of speech, she felt him bear her along the passage, where the smoke clouds were now shot through with streaks of flame. She thickened about her. Lancaster was carrying her down the stairs now, while hungry flames sprang at them from the walls and floor. He was staggering drunkenly when they reached the hall below.

He placed her on the grass, and plunged back into the flames. The institute was ablaze, fire streamed from the roof and windows. A group of villagers, clustered upon the lawn, looked on helplessly. Joan saw Joan, looking on the matron, approaching kindly, lending to tell him that Lancaster had gone back; she could not counter but he understood her.

"Dear, the doctor's safe," he said, and as she spoke Joan saw Lancaster among a group of men who had gathered about something wrapped in a blanket.

He rose and came to her. That was all Joan remembered.

And for days and nights her memories of the past were cut short with Lancaster's return, that night, borne back by the power of her love lunging across the miles between them. She knew that he lived, and as the night of the end altered into her mind there came with it the sense of an abiding peace, as if the past was dead, with all its terrors.

Sometimes she felt that Lancaster was beside her; but when at last complete consciousness returned Joan found herself in bed in a strange house. Through the windows she could see the outlines of the familiar mountains, gilded in the red sunset glow against the blue of the sky. Beside her sat a figure which seemed to be so remotely of the past that it was difficult to refrain from laughing at the incongruity of the sight.

It was Jenkins, with his black head. As Joan stirred he turned toward her. "That's right, Miss Wentworth," he said heartily. "Now you've rounded the corner, and I reckon the lane lies straight before you."

"The doctor did not steal that money," murmured Joan weakly.

Jenkins laughed as if her words amused him immensely. "Why, Miss Wentworth, you've been saying that to me every time you woke those five days past," he said, "but I couldn't ever get you to tell me how you knew it."

"I don't remember saying it before," said Joan.

"I reckon you've been pretty weak, Miss Wentworth. But tell me now how you know it?"

"I don't know. Why, yes, of course I do. Doctor Lancaster couldn't steal anything. Where is he?"

"I'll fetch him, Miss Wentworth. He wants to see you; he's been sitting beside you for days waiting till you really woke up."

"I'm not burned, Doctor Jenkins?" asked Joan in alarm.

"Not the least little bit, Miss Wentworth. I'll bring you a mirror."

"No, I take you on trust. What made me so ill, Doctor Jenkins?"

The doctor hesitated. The old obstinate look began to close down on which would never be known, but were certainly providential.

She saw further, by the same intuition which told her that it had been Mrs. Dana's body wrapped in the blanket upon the lawn. Myers, knowing her to be drugged, and believing Lancaster dead, had waited in Mrs. Dana's room and given her the matches, on her return, with which to start the fire, hoping thus to make sure of his victims and cover up his tracks. And he had fallen into the trap he had baited. Strong as he was, there must have been a stronger Power fighting him with Mrs. Dana's arms that night, when she turned the key in the lock and left him to die as he had willed Joan should die.

But Joan knew that no word of this would ever pass between Lancaster and her. And indeed, as she lay back and looked across the fields toward the mountains, she felt that something had turned that page, so that it had become not only of the dead past, but unreal in a way, and only the present page existed.

She heard a quick step without. Lancaster stood in the doorway, came toward her, knelt at her side and took her hands in his. And with that even the memories of the past became tenuous, half forgotten.

"Dear, it has come true," he said tenderly.

She lay happily in his arms, looking out all the time toward the sunset on the hills. There was so little to say, because their lives were only beginning.

"I don't want to go back to Avonmouth," she said at length.

"Nor I, Joan. This is our country. It must always be our country. But—but the night, John?"

"I have stolen a march on you, my dear," he answered softly. "I have fought out my fight while you were ill. I have resigned from the hospital; nobody guesses anything there; and I have convinced the trustees here, by my appearance, and by the presentation of certain papers happily discovered after the fire, that I am a responsible, moral person, honest enough to head the new institute which we are going to build—guess where?"

She looked at him. Then—

"That village in the mountains," she cried happily. "Where our lives really began. I could not wish for anything better."

"And the patient is going to be our porter. And Doctor Jenkins will be house surgeon, resident, with his wife—Joan, he didn't tell you about Mrs. Fraser? Jenkins! Jenkins!" His voice rang through the little house.

"Come in at once and face the fire like a man, instead of slinking away into your consulting-room, you ruffianly young beast!"

[THE END]

She Staggered and Fell into Lancaster's Arms.

his features. But Joan caught him by the arm indignantly.

"Come, now, tell me," she said. "Did he—did he inject morphine into me?"

"No, Miss Wentworth," said Jenkins, unable to hold out. "It wasn't morphine. It was curare—the stuff that paralyzes the motor nerves without destroying consciousness." His face grew somber. "It doesn't leave traces, as morphine does, and that devil had put it into morphine bottles and made the doctor think he was a morphine fiend. They hoped to kill him more quickly, but somehow he got used to it, and I guess they were at their wits' ends when you came along. But I'll call the doctor, Miss Wentworth."

When he was gone Joan lay back on her pillows, looking out into the mountains. She knew what had occurred that night; in her drugged state she had seen the whole dreadful picture; Myers unlocking Mrs. Dana's door and leading her to her own room, where she had obtained the revolver; her journey to Lancaster's room, bent on her dreadful mission; the murder of Lawson, in the room opposite, instead, for reasons

The Marriage Problem

You can not make yourself keep on loving some one in order that you can make yourself fall in or out of love with some one to order. It's like asking a small boy to light a street lamp with only a match. He can't reach—the whole thing's beyond him. That's the tragedy—the whole relationship is dependent on something that sails as airily remote above your head as a drifting cloud. To base on that an irrevocable agreement? It's simply asking for trouble. It's like jumping into ten feet of water without knowing whether you can swim or not, and then complaining because you're drowned.—From "The Marriage-Craft," by D. H. S. Nicholson.

Throw Out the Life Line

Just before the conclusion of the weekly prayer meeting in a country town one evening the parson arose, and glanced over the congregation.

"Is there anybody present," said he, "who wishes the prayers of the congregation for a relative or a friend?"

"Yes, parson," answered a tall, angular woman, rising to her feet. "I want the congregation to pray for my husband!"

"Why, Sister Martha," exclaimed the parson, with a surprised expression, "you have no husband!"

"I know I haven't," was the calm rejoinder of Sister Martha. "I want all hands to pitch in and help pray for one."

Telephone to Teach Better Enunciation

Men who are trying to improve telephone service believe that the telephone will teach its users to speak clearly—not with one conversation, but in the course of time. And, certainly, business would be expedited with perfect enunciation over the telephone. Even a simple name like Dix, when passed over the wires may become almost anything—and then it is spelled for verification, thus: "D for Dan, I to Ike, X for X-ray"—words as difficult as the one to be understood.

Progress in plain talking does seem to lag, in the opinion of The Nation's Business. Any optimism in that direction is blighted by the bash in our daily speech. Ideas seem to have transmission as much by telepathy as by telephony. "Wasatuyugitudo 'nighlhub?" But a jumble of letters will make sound and so may a message to sophisticated ears. The ears are more expert than the ear at registering words. Whoever was fooled by the blanks to the penny dreadful of the long ago? The d—s were promptly accepted at their full brimstone content, but a curse by telephone might easily be garbled into a compliment. It's a wire ear that knows its own tongue.

It Happened in Boston

There had been a visitor, and to the lad she said: "And so this is little Walter? My, my! What a big eye you've grown to be! I wouldn't have believed it possible."

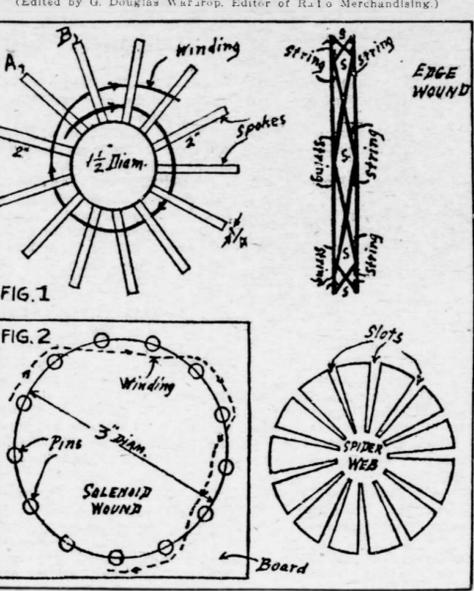

"Mother," said Walter when the visitor had gone, "doesn't it pass your comprehension how persons in whom one would naturally expect an ordinary degree of intelligence appear to believe, all history and nature to the contrary notwithstanding, that the children of their acquaintance will always remain infants, and persist in expressing surprise when they observe the perfectly natural increase in one's stature?"—Washington Star.

Not Suited to It

Mrs. Keyhammer—Don't you like my playing? You know, "Music hurt cherubs to soothe the savage breast." Her Husband—Mebbe it hath, I s'pose I'm not savage enough.

Low-loss coils require large wire, good spacing between turns and, preferably, no supporting dielectric. If one uses a supporting tube or frame-work he must be sure it is high quality. Keeping metal out of the field of the coil is important.

The difference between the various ways of winding is shown in the figures. Of course, every one knows that a coil wound on a tube, or so that the completed coil itself forms a tube, is known as a solenoid winding. It is probably the most common form of winding we find.

Then there is spiral winding in which the diameter of the coils progressively increases. One turn is wound on top of the other outward so the resulting coil is one turn wide. It resembles somewhat the flat pancake type. The form for which is at the right of Fig. 2.

This type is called the spider-web coil for obvious reasons. The inner diameter or diameter of the first turn, is usually about an inch and a half. There must be an odd number of slots. Usually the winding goes in one slot and out the other, under and over each spoke in turn. There is no reason why it should not go under two and over two just as in the Lorenz windings shown in the other figures. The usual Reinartz coil is a spider-web coil and can be very easily made by cutting a 6 to 8 inch disk of dielectric and slotting it after the manner shown.

Characteristics of Coils.

Basket-weave coils are of two types, edge wound, resembling the spiral and spider-web, or solenoid wound, resembling the coil on a tube. The same forms may be used for basket weave as for Lorenz and are illustrated in Figs. 1 and 2.

In Fig. 1 is shown the most convenient form for use around the worktable. It is a center disk with 13 cylindrical spokes. The inside-form may be purchased complete. It may be made from a saved-off piece of curtain rod and 13 spokes. The spokes must be removable, however. There must be an odd number of them and they can be any material, as can the center. Thirteen is just a convenient, lucky number.

In winding the edgewise basket weave the wire will go over one spoke and under the next, over and under one spoke at a time. The resulting coil will be a lattice-work effect similar to the reed baskets so often seen, or feed furniture.

The Winding.

In winding the Lorenz coil, go over two spokes and under two, over and under two at a time continually. Because there is an odd number, you will continually shift the starting point for each turn, as shown at the left of Fig. 1. While both first and second turns start by going over spoke A, one goes over and one goes under spoke B. This is because of the odd number of spokes not divisible by two. The resulting coil is shown at the right of Fig. 1, with more of a trellis effect. Both sides are smooth, while neither side of the basket weave is smooth. The basket weave, however, is self-holding, but the Lorenz coil must be tied with string at the corners as indicated, before pulling out the spokes. That is, the white cord one sees on the coils sold commercially.

THE real cause of skin trouble—rashes, blackheads, excessive oiliness, etc.—is a way down in the lower layers of the skin. It cannot be expected therefore that mere surface remedies can reach the disorder.

Thousands of physicians are daily prescribing Resinol Ointment and Resinol Soap. They know this gentle, yet effective treatment does sink deep, and will often soothe away in a few days the most stubborn rash as well as a trifling blemish. No home should be without these products—the soap for general toilet use—the ointment to check the first bit of skin eruption. At all druggists.

How to Vary Voltage of Your "B" Batteries

the hotter and therefore are not getting utmost efficiency from the tube.

The switching arrangement shown is an old trick, but very good. It consists of nine switch points and a switch lever. These are mounted either on the panel of the set or on an individual strip. The only critical tube is the detector, therefore it is necessary to use only on this one.

Every other point is left blank. Otherwise the lever would short one of the cells every time it touched two of the points at the same time.

The connections are made to 16½, 18, 19½, 21 and 22½ volts. These taps are found on most styles of "B" battery. If yours has no taps it would be advisable to substitute it for one that has.

For 40-volt detectors, put this on the second instead of the first battery.

MAKE NO MISTAKE

Getting on the map in a big way is the rightful ambition of every town, but getting there is a job not finished in a day, week, month, or year. It is achieved only by the consistent effort of a town's citizens. In proportion to such collective effort does the town establish for itself a reputation of progressiveness. Its stores are better stores; its civic life is more entertaining and happier.

Make no mistake that it is someone else's job to accomplish those things right here in KEWASKUM. It is your job, as it is every loyal citizen's job, day in and day out, in every thought and act. Read this message now—then resolve to add your mite to the program which will make KEWASKUM a bigger and better town. If we all do this, KEWASKUM will grow; jobs will be more plentiful; wages will be higher; we will all be more prosperous; we will have better homes, and we will be happier.

Boost KEWASKUM at every opportunity. Call attention to the good things in KEWASKUM. Beat down subtle propaganda which in anyway would hold up to ridicule or belittle our town. Even amongst our own townfolks we should not let the habit grow of failing to appreciate the present development and growth of our town. If you live in KEWASKUM and make your living in KEWASKUM then KEWASKUM is entitled to your whole-hearted support.

Trade in KEWASKUM. The quickest way to a bigger and better KEWASKUM is through the growth and development of its commercial organizations. To be able to offer you bigger stocks of merchandise, merchants must have your trade—all of your trade. They cannot hire more help nor can they put more money into circulation with new improvements and new buildings if their stores are to be used only as emergency shops. Think this over.
