The tables for the commercial room arrived Wednesday.

The seniors have written several essays. Here is a specimen of one they produced:

The Modern Flapper and Society
The modern flapper is a common phenomenon in many of the streets, in school, and in many homes. On the street she is found to attract attention either by her so-called beautified face, her dress, or by her exaggerated charm with which she carries herself on a pair of those neck-breaking ornaments which adorn the pedal extremities. The artistic applications on her face consist of about two grams of rouge, eight grams of powder, one gram of lip-stick, and an equal quantity of eye-brow pencil, which may be appropriately called stove polish. A profusion of locks are found flinging themselves with ease about the head, naughty eyes. The scanty gown which barely covers her person is minus six inches on the top, and minus two feet on the bottom. This is still saying nothing of the varied colors of thread used to mend the frack from knee to toe runners in the rolled socks. So much for the street apparel.

Persons who are affected with a high-brow's lineal of superiority are conscious of the existence of flappers in all schools. Everyone becomes an addict to the noticing of her vulgarity, loose morals, and loud sentimentality. All her ideals are expressed in actions. Since we believe that actions speak louder than words, we are inclined to set up unconsciously a standard that will straighten out the morals, through our actions, of this poor ill-fated creature. Let us hope for the better! She is found constantly stumbling over someone's feet in her wild exerted dashes. Whenever an infected lad suggests a joy ride, she is right on the job. No wonder that many accuse her of guilt, namely, the spoiling of the half closed mind of an upright lad. Even in this accomplishment her sentimentality expresses no refinement, but vulgarity, loudness, and awkwardness. Her report cards indicate failure. Due to this fact, the professors and students are given severe knocks and criticism. However, through out the ages, society has been burdened with this personality.

In the homes where she exists, families are found to live on a daily can-can's diet. In the kitchen, her dress is of practically valuable material worn without an apron. Filth may be allowed to lodge in the food but not a speck of foreign material is allowed to be lodged under those precious finger nails. She regards them as that attribute to the feminine sex which has been handed to her through the Orientals. Usually, this kind of a home is not a happy one for the source from which the income is deducted, is hardly enough to buy all the style. In all the flapper in society is an artificial personage, radical to the extreme in style, loudness of actions, and vulgarity. She little regards knowledge that makes for the betterment of the feminine sex as well as for all mankind.

TO HAVE A BUILDING INSPECTOR

An ordinance regulating the construction of buildings and providing for a building inspector and an electrical inspector was introduced at the last meeting of the common council. The ordinance was adopted in other cities. This bit of legislation provides that before any building can be erected it must have the approval of the building inspector who will interest himself in the construction of the building to the point that the building is erected according to the code prescribed in the ordinance which conforms with the Wisconsin Building Code. Fees for a permit are based on the cubic contents of the building and there are restrictions also regarding types of buildings that may be erected within the fire limit. Another important clause of the ordinance provides for the licensing of electrical contractors and inspection of all electrical work. Dangers to human life and from fire as the result of faulty electrical work cannot be under-estimated.—Cedarburg News.

"LOVE THIEF" IS GRIPPING

Drama, comedy and a gorgeous background are the outstanding memorables of the opening performance of "The Love Thief" at the Opera House Sunday.

Rapid action, a sweet love story, and some very clever comedy to relieve the dramatic moments are the "makings" of this pot pourri of entertainment.

Through it all suspense is kept at a high pitch by the intrigues of grasping foreign powers whose representatives are in the court. We have two countries about to make war, with Norman Kerry representing one and Greta Nissen the other. A marriage is arranged to avert such a calamity but Kerry falls in love and refuses to take part in the royal wedding.

Duels, fights, disguise, escape and final happiness occur in rapid succession to the impressive background of lively court scenes, beautiful sets and attractively uniformed men.

Kerry rises to dramatic heights in this picture of greater sincerity than anything he has done recently and he has done some very fine work in recent pictures.

That little Norwegian girl, Greta Nissen, discloses the reason she was brought from Europe and immediately starred. She is beautiful, wistful and a consummate actress.

Special credit must go to John Mc Dermott. He wrote the story and then directed it himself. Its dramatic structure is excellent.

FATHER AND SON NEARLY DROWN

Henry "Judge" Luebke and his son Adolph, aged 16 years, residents of this city had a narrow escape from drowning last Sunday. Father and son were fishing on small Cedar Lake and when the father was making some adjustments to one of his fish lines he lost his balance and fell into the lake, the water at that point (just out from the Harnsward summer resort) being about 30 feet in depth. As he went overboard the galvanized steel boat, having two air chambers, dipped so much water that it became filled, and the oars were lifted from their sockets and were carried away by the wind. Mr. Luebke and son cried for help and their cries were heard by George Poul of this city who had been fishing several blocks distant, by two Milwaukee young men—Willard Witte and Harold Stamher—and by Edwin Thomas. All hurried to the Luebke boat, in which the son was still sitting, the boat failing to sink because of its having the air chambers. Father and son were helped into Mr. Poul's boat and were hurriedly taken to Mr. Thomas's home and there given a change of clothes. Although both suffered from the cold air and because of their drenching, they were none the worse for their experience, and today are as healthy as ever and quite happy that they are alive.—West Bend Pilot.

FISHERMEN PAY BIG FINE

Hugo Freitag and Andrew Spell, residing at the south end of Big Cedar lake, who were arrested on September 29th, for fishing with a 150-foot gill net, in big Cedar lake, were tried before Judge Davison in circuit court on Monday. Both men plead guilty to the charge and were fined $250 and costs amounting to $262.35. In addition to this they were placed under probation to Mich. Kratzer for nine months. Messrs Freitag and Spell were arrested by Deputy Sheriff Art. Juech and Mich. Kratzer, secretary of the Washington County Fish and Game Protective association. As the minimum fine for using a gill net is $200, it can readily be seen that the Judge imposed a heavy fine to teach an example for others to follow.

ONE MAN KILLED; TWO INJURED

One man is dead, one is seriously injured, another is slightly injured, and another is being held on $1,000 bond as a result of an accident about half way between Fort Washington and Saukville last Sunday morning about 1:30 o'clock. Otto Boger, formerly of this place but now of West Allis, was instantly killed when his skull was crushed. His brother, William, suffered several broken ribs, a badly injured right shoulder, and a bruised head and neck. Ray Eichenseer, a nephew, received a sprained ankle although he is able to walk around. Edward Schwartz has been charged with the accidental killing of Otto Boger while driving recklessly. A coroner's jury Monday afternoon gave this decision after listening at the inquest to evidence presented by witnesses of the scene of the accident.—Port Washington Herald.

CLEAR REFUGE LAKE OF CARP

Seining of carp and other rough fish from Moon lake, in the wild life refuge of Milwaukee chapter Isaak Walton league, was started Wednesday and probably will continue all this week. The rough fish are to be taken from the lake to make it a better place for game fish, which do not thrive in places where carp are too plentiful.

The first haul of a 3,000-foot seine Wednesday took about 1,500 pounds of carp. The seining is being done by a crew in charge of E. M. Stendall, Oshkosh, who makes a business of seining rough fish from Wisconsin lakes. Paul J. Edwards, state game warden, looks after the seining to see that all game fish are returned to the water. A large group of Milwaukee residents, members of the Walton league, witnessed the haul Wednesday.

Among the fish caught was a big northern pike that would weigh about 15 pounds, wall-eyed pike and a large number of croppies. No black bass taken. All the game fish were returned to the lake. The carp are picked out of the seine after it is hauled into shallow water at the shore and thrown into a big livebox, where they are kept until the lake is entirely seined, after which they are taken to the nearest railroad station and shipped either to Chicago or New York, the latter city being the principal market for them. They bring from 5 or 6 cents to as high as 10 cents a pound.—Milwaukee Journal.

TO VOTE ON WET AND DRY REFERENDUM

Madison, Wis.—Wisconsin voters are going to have plenty of help in making up their minds as to whether they prefer prohibition as it now stands or a modification to the extent of permitting 2.75 per cent beer which question will be voted on Nov. 2.

Battleships both for and against bear are being laid in Milwaukee and in both ways will be carried to all sections of the state this month. W. A. Ganfield, Waukesha, who opposed Senator Robert M. La Follette for the United States senate in the last race of the senator for that office, has been selected to lead the anti-beer campaign.

Wets interested in "educating" the voters to endorse the beer plan have not as yet announced their battalions but it is understood that they plan on launching a state-wide advertising campaign.

The organization of the dries in Milwaukee definitely decided that they were going to accept the challenge and meet the issue. During the discussion on the beer referendum frequent reports came from the dry camp that dries would take no interest in the election and would stay away from the polls so that the results would mean nothing. But this policy has been discarded and the fight has been launched by the dries to try and defeat the beer demand.

Dr. Ganfield has announced that his organization called the "Committee of One Thousand," would confine itself solely to the beer issue and would endorse no candidates. Officers of the Anti-Saloon league are members of the anti-beer committee and will help push the dry "educational" campaign.

LYDIA OF THE PINES

By HONORÉ WILLISIE

WNU Service

STORY FROM THE START

Lydia, with her baby sister, returns from an arduous day of play to find the household in a state of commotion. Her father, Amos, is in a state of great excitement, and her mother, Mrs. Levine, is in a state of great distress. Lydia, who is a very kind and helpful girl, tries to help her mother and father in their time of need. She finds out that her father has been arrested for a crime, and she tries to help her mother and father in their time of need. She finds out that her father has been arrested for a crime, and she tries to help her mother and father in their time of need.

CHAPTER VII

The Republican Candidate

Amos and Kent caught Charlie by either arm as his hands clutched for Lydia's throat. Marshall did not stir out of his chair. During the remainder of the episode his face wore a complacent expression that, though Lydia did not consciously observe it at the time, returned to her in after years with peculiar significance.

"Here! Here! This won't do, my young man!" cried Amos.

"Let me get at him!" cried Charlie.

Lydia ran over to the Indian.

"Charlie," she pleaded, looking up into his face, "you mustn't hurt Mr. Levine. He's my best friend. And it is not polite to come to call at my house and make a row, this way."

"That's right," commented Marshall. "Do your fighting outdoors."

John had not stirred from his chair. He looked up at the Indian and said slowly and insolently, "Get out of here! You know what I can do to you, don't you? Well, get out before I do it!"

Charlie returned John's look of contempt with one of concentrated hatred. Then he turned to Kent.

"Come on, Kent," he growled and followed by his friend, he marched out of the kitchen door.

"Whew!" said Amos, "talk about scolding Indians!"

Lydia was trembling violently. "What made him act so— Did you hurt his sister, Mr. Levine?"

"Didn't even know he had a sister," returned John, coolly retighting his collar.

Marshall rose and stretched his fat body. "Well, you serve up too much excitement for me, Amos. I'll be getting along. Come Margery."

"Wait and wait, all have some coffee," said Lizzie. "Land, I'm all shook up."

"Ishaw! I want anything. Kent should have had more sense than to bring him in here," said Levine.

"Why, he's usually perfectly lovely," protested Lydia. "Goes to parties with the girls and everything."

"First boy, white or Indian, that comes to call on you for years' experience, I'll turn the horse on!" said Dave, winking at the men.

When the door had closed Amos said: "Any real trouble with the boy, John?"

"Shucks, no!" returned Levine. "Forget it!"

And forget it they did while the November dusk drew to a close and the red eyes of the stove blazed a warmer and warmer glow. About eight o'clock, after a light supper, Levine started back for town. He had not been gone five minutes when a shot cracked through the breathless night air.

Amos started for the door but Lizzie grasped his arm. "You stay right here, Amos, and take care of the house."

"What do you suppose it was?" whispered Lydia. "I wish Mr. Levine was here. He's sheriff."

"That's what I'm afraid of—that something happened to him—between his being sheriff and his other interests. I'll get my lantern."

"Wait! I'll have to fill it for you," said Lydia.

So it was that while Amos fumed and Lydia sought vainly for a new week, footsteps sounded on the porch, the door opened and Billy Norton and his father supported John Levine into the living-room. Levine's overcoat showed a patch of red on the right breast.

"For God's sake! Here, put him on the couch," gasped Amos.

"Billy, take Levine's bicycle and get the doctor here," said Pa Norton.

Lydia trembling violently could scarcely carry the crushed ice from Lizzie to her father. No one spoke until the gentle cooing of the blood yielded to the freezing process. Then Amos said in a low voice to Pa Norton:

"What happened?"

"Can't say. Billy and I were coming home from town when we heard the shot ahead of us. It took us a minute or two to come up to Levine. He was standing dazed like, said the shot had come from the lake shore way and that's all he knew about it."

"The best of horse's hoofs on the frozen ground," Lydia said the silence that followed. In a moment Doctor Fulton ran into the room. Lydia seized Florence Dombey and hurried to the kitchen, nor did she leave her station in the furthest corner until the door closed softly after the doctor. Amos

"Doc got the bullet," said Amos. "Grazed the top of the lungs and came to the surface near the backbone. Lord, that was a narrow escape!"

"Who did it, daddy?"

Amos shook his head. "It might have been Charlie Jackson or it might have been his dog. A sheriff's liable to have plenty of enemies. Billy started a bunch hunting."

Lydia shivered.

"Doc got the bullet," said Amos. "We're going to be busy in this house for a while."

"I want to see him first, please, daddy."

"Just a peek then, don't make a noise."

Already the living-room had a sick room aspect. The light was lowered and the table was littered with bandages and bottles. Lydia crept up to the couch and stood looking down at the gaunt, quiet figure.

"I've got to get well, so's you and I can travel," whispered Levine. "Good night, dear."

Lydia swallowed a sob. "Good night," she said.

The shooting was a seven days' wonder, but no clue was found as to the identity of the would-be assassin. Charlie Jackson had spent the evening with Kent. As the monotony of Levine's convalescence came on, gossip and conjecture lost interest in him. John himself would not speak of the shooting.

It was after Christmas before Lydia, coming home from school with Adam, who always went to meet her, would find John, pale and weak but fully dressed, watching for her from his arm-chair by the window. The two had many long talks, in the early winter dusk, before Lydia started her preparations for supper. One of these, particularly, the child never forgot.

"Everybody acted queer about Charlie Jackson, at first," said Lydia, "but now you're getting well, they're all so crazy about him as ever."

"He'll kill some one in a football scrimmage yet," was John's comment.

"No, the boys say he never loses his temper. The rest of them do. I wish girls played football. I bet I'd make a good quarterback."

John laughed weakly but delightedly. "You must weigh fully a hundred pounds! Why, honey, they'd trample a hundred pounds to death!"

"They would not!" Lydia's voice was indignant. "And just feel my muscles. I get 'em from swimming."

John ran his hand over the proffered shoulders and arm. "My goodness," he said in astonishment. "Those muscles are like tiny steel springs. Well, what else would you like to be besides quarterback, Lydia?"

Lydia hitched her chair closer to Levine and gazed toward the kitchen where Lizzie was knitting and warming her feet in the oven. "I'd like to own an orphan asylum. I'd get the money to run it with from a gold mine. I would find a mine in New Mexico. I know I could if I could just get out there."

"But what are you really going to do with yourself, Lydia, pipe dreams and all?"

"Well, first I'm going to get an education. Clear up through the university. Get an education if you have to scrub the street to do it; was what mother always said. You can be a lady and be poor; she said, but you can't be a lady and use poor English. And then I'm going to be as good a housekeeper as Mrs. Marshall and I'm going to dress as well as Olga Reinhardt, and have as pretty hands as Miss Towne. And I'm never going to move out of the home I make. Maybe I'll get married. I suppose I'll have to 'cause I want at least six children, and some one's got to support them, and I'll want to travel a good deal."

"Travel takes money," John reminded her.

By the middle of January, Levine was sufficiently recovered to leave. The Saturday before he left occurred another conversation between him and Lydia that cemented still further the quaint friendship of the two.

Lizzie was taking a long nap. The dear old soul had been exhausted by the nursing. Levine lay on the couch and finally asked Lydia to read aloud to him. She was deep in "The Old Curiosity Shop" and was glad to share it with her friend.

Suddenly Levine was astonished to hear Lydia's voice tremble. She was reading of little Nell's last sickness. "She was dead. Dear, patient, noble Nell was dead. No sleep so beautiful fresh from the hand of God. Not one who had lived and suffered death."

Lydia suddenly broke off, bowed her yellow head on the book and broke into deep, long-drawn sobs that were more like a woman's than a child's.

John rose as quickly as he could. "My dearest!" he exclaimed. "What's the matter?" He pulled her from the arm chair, seated himself, then drew her to his knees.

"I can't hear it!" sobbed Lydia. "I do not talk of taking the lands from the Indians by crooked methods. You all know the law. An Indian may not sell the lands allotted to him. I want you to send me to congress to change that law. I want the Indians to be able to sell his acres."

Lydia stopped and bowed. Pandemonium broke loose in the square. Clapping, hisses, cheers and catcalls. Lydia clung to her father's arm while he began to struggle through the crowd.

"Well," he said, as they reached the outer edge of the square and headed for the trolley, "the battle is on."

This was the beginning of Lydia's reading of the newspapers. To her father's secret amusement, she found

Why, child, this isn't right. You're too young for such thoughts! Lydia, do you read the Bible?"

She nodded. "I've tried that, too—but Jesus might have lived in a quiet world bounded by her school, the home, the hit of lake shore and wood with which she was intimate, and peopled by her father and her few friends."

CHAPTER VIII

The Note

Margery Marshall had entered high school this fall. She was growing tall, and her beauty already was remarkably attractive. Her little head carried its great black braids proudly. The pallor of her skin was perfectly healthy—and even the senior boys were seen to observe her with interest and appreciation.

The results of Lydia's summer dress-making had not been bad. She had made herself several creditable shirt-waists and a neat little blue serge skirt. She came back to school with zeal and less than her usual sense of shabbiness.

It was a day toward the first of October at the noon hour that Lydia met Kent and Charlie Jackson.

"Hello, Lyd! How's everything?" asked Kent. "I haven't seen you to talk to since last spring."

"Did you have a fine summer?" said Lydia.

"Aw, only part of it. Dad made me work all the middle of August, then Charlie and I camped up on the reservation."

"There comes Margery," said Lydia. "She hardly speaks to me now, she's been to New York."

"How do do, Kent?" Margery approached languidly, including Lydia and Charlie in her nod. "I hope you all had a pleasant summer. Mother and I were in New York."

Kent, Lydia and Charlie exchanged glances.

"I had a pretty good summer," said Lydia. "I sewed and cooked and scrubbed and swam, and once Adam, dad, Mr. Levine and I walked clear over the lake, eighteen miles."

"I don't see how your father can let that Mr. Levine come to your house!" exclaimed Margery with sudden energy. "My father says he's a dangerous man."

"He's a crook!" said Charlie stolidly and finally.

Lydia stamped her foot. "He's not, and he's my friend!" she cried.

Lydia's crook repeated Charlie slowly. "What he's trying to do goes through, my tribe'll be wader, on the face of the earth. If I thought it would do any good, I'd kill him. But some other brute of a white would take his place. It's hopeless."

The three young whites looked at the Indian wonderingly. Their little spitting was as nothing, they realized, to the mature and tragic bitterness that Charlie expressed. A vague sense of a catastrophe, epic in character, that the Indian evidently saw clearly, but was beyond their comprehension, silenced them. The awkward pause was broken by the school bell.

Lydia had plenty to think of on her long walk home. Charlie's voice and words haunted her. What did it all mean? Why was he so resentful and so hopeless? She made up her mind that when she had the opportunity to ask him, she would.

The opportunity came about simply enough. At recess one day a week or so later he asked her if she was going to the first senior "hop" of the year. Lydia gave him a clear look.

"Why do you ask me that? Just to embarrass me?" she said.

Charlie looked startled. "I don't know I didn't mean anything," he exclaimed. "What're you so touchy about?"

Lydia's cheeks burned redder than usual. "I went to a party at Miss Towne's when I was a freshman and I promised myself I'd never go to another."

"Why not?" Charlie's astonishment was genuine.

"Clothes," replied Lydia, briefly.

The Indian boy leaned against a desk and looked Lydia over through half-closed eyes. "You're an awful pretty girl, Lydia. Honest you are, and you've got more brain in a minute than any other girl in school'll have all her life."

Lydia blushed furiously. Then moved by Charlie's simplicity and obviously sincere liking, she came closer to him and said, "Then, Charlie, why hasn't any boy ever asked me to a party? Is it just clothes?"

"Lydia, I'll take you to a party a week, if you'll go," he cried.

"No! No! I couldn't go," she protested. "Answer my question—is it clothes?"

"No, only half clothes," answered Charlie, smiling honestly. "The other half is just what he's got. You know, the fellows like a girl that giggles a lot and don't know as much as he does and that's a peachy dancer and that'll let him hold her hand and kiss her. And that's the honest to God truth, Lydia."

"Oh," she said. "Oh— Then, 'Well, I could giggle all right. I can't dance very well because I've just picked up the steps from watching the girls teach each other in the cloak-room. Oh, well, I don't care! I've got Adam and I've got Mr. Levine. Why do you hate him so, Charlie?"

"Lots of reasons. And I'll hate him more if he gets his bill through congress."

Lydia stopped and bowed. Pandemonium broke loose in the square. Clapping, hisses, cheers and catcalls. Lydia clung to her father's arm while he began to struggle through the crowd.

"Well," he said, as they reached the outer edge of the square and headed for the trolley, "the battle is on."

Pretty Things that are Made at Home

WHAT satisfaction there is to the hostess who knows that every body is having a good time at her party. And what fun to listen to the ohs and ahs of the guests as they make merry over the cunning party favors, for favors have so much to do with the success of one's party.

Now that the fall and winter party season is just beginning, it is high time for those who plan to entertain to get busy at making up a collection of party favors. Here's a new idea—harmonies favors for the men and women and see how beautifully it will

SHERIFF RHODE'S CAR HITS TRAIN
Sheriff Wm. Rhode and A. F. Baxter of Beaver Dam were injured and their auto was completely demolished at 12:30 Thursday morning when the car in which they were riding ran into a train which was slowly crossing Highway 15 at Byron. Baxter was taken to the hospital at Fond du Lac while Rhode was taken to his home at Juneau. Mr. Baxter's injuries consisted of a fractured skull, a broken right arm and minor bruises and cuts. Surgeons have performed an operation and removed a splinter from the skull which had penetrated the brain. He was unconscious for several days. Sheriff Rhode was confined to his bed on Thursday but since is up and around. Sheriff Rhode and Baxter were returning from Sheboygan where they had gone to make an arrest. It is said the train was moving slowly at the Byron crossing of the Soo Line and that the men in the auto failed to see it until too late. The auto crashed into the side of a freight car, knocking the front wheels of the car from the track. The impact cut the air hose and stopped the train. The auto, a Hudson was completely wrecked. It was removed by a wrecking crew.—Lomira Review.

THE DOG AND THE EGG
A big black retriever, named Peter, belonging to a farmer of East Leake, near Loughborough, England, has shown a partiality for a pulled white being on bad terms with the rest of the feathered inhabitants of the farm. Every morning the pulled hen walked over the dog's back to the end of its kennel and laid an egg. It is immediately laid in a shell and all.

McCormick-Deering Engines

With the sturdy, rugged McCormick-Deering Engine pumping the water, running the washing machine, etc., you know the work will be done. And without the engine overheating or running up the operating expense. Every part of the McCormick-Deering is built for steady, important work. Dirt, sand and trash mean little to the McCormick-Deering, as the crank-case is enclosed. The cylinder is removable; in case of wear a new one can be inserted at low cost. The large water hopper permits a generous supply—no overheating.

THREE QUESTIONS TO BE DECIDED UPON AT ELECTION
Besides making a choice of candidates at the general election on November 2, Wisconsin voters will pass on three questions which will be submitted to them.
Considerable has been heard of the beer referendum this fall which asks the voters whether they want the manufacture and sale of 2.75 per cent beer with the provision that it cannot be consumed on the premises where purchased.
Another question to be submitted will be whether the voters want to give the legislature the power to raise the governor's salary above $5,000 a year, the present salary. There has been much agitation to raise the pay of Wisconsin Governors with many state officials now receiving more than that amount.
The third question to be submitted will be whether the voters want the institution of the recall of elective officials in the state. If this is adopted it means that any state, county, congressional, judicial or legislative officer who is elected can be made the subject of a recall election after the first year in office. The first step in an attempted recall would be the presentation of a petition with 25 per cent of the vote in the last election of governor as signers. In the case of a state officer this would now mean 200,000 signers to a petition. The recall election would then be held in 90 days and the candidate under fire would automatically become a candidate to succeed himself.

BOLTONVILLE IS ELECTRIFIED
The village of Boltonville was connected with the West Bend Heating and Lighting company's electric light and power lines last Friday. Boltonville has been waiting for some time for this opportunity to modernize itself, but until this fall the lines remained several miles from the village. They were extended by the light company only recently and the village now boasts modern, dependable lighting and power service.—West Bend News.

Fordham Gridders Get a Bit of Action Into Practice

The photograph shows Walsh, Fordham tackle, on the ground with the ball after Bruce, tackle, had furnished a bit of action after missing his man during the first practice of the season at Fordham field.

BILL SOUTHWORTH ON FIVE CLUBS

With Indians, Braves, Giants, Pirates and Cards.

Bill Southworth, veteran outfielder, who was traded by the Giants to the Cardinals, is now in his tenth season as a major league player. The St. Louis club is the fifth major league team of which he has been a member, as he has also played with the Indians, Pirates, Braves and Giants.

Southworth began his professional career as an outfielder and he has played that position ever since. His first engagement was with the Portsmouth team in 1912. He remained with that team during most of the following season. In August of that year he was obtained by the Indians, but he did not take part in any games with the Cleveland club. Several days after being obtained by the Indians he was transferred to the Toledo club and he participated in a total of 37 games, batting .222.

After remaining in the American association until the middle of the season of 1915, Southworth was recalled by the Indians. He took part in 60 games with the Cleveland club during that campaign and he batted .220. Late in that season he was transferred to the Portland club of the Pacific Coast league.

During the entire season of 1916 Southworth remained with the Portland team. He took part in 171 games in the outfield with that club and his batting average was .300. At the end of that season he was signed by the Birmingham club of the Southern association. He played in 103 games with Birmingham during the season of 1917 and he batted .285. He remained with Birmingham during the first half of the following season. He played in 64 games with the Birmingham club that season and he batted .214.

During the season of 1918 Southworth was obtained from the Birmingham club by the Pirates and he has been in the National league ever since.

Paddy Driscoll Signs

Paddy Driscoll, star player of the Chicago Cardinal professional football team of the National league, has signed a contract to play with the Chicago Bears, managed by George Halas and Ed Screamin. Former University of Illinois star, Halas said Driscoll would be the second highest priced professional football player in America, only Harold Gagne exceeding him.

Golf Is Favorite Sport of President Heydler

"My favorite sport is golf," declared John A. Heydler, president of the National league. "I find baseball my recreation. It is my business, too, but if I were suddenly removed from the presidency I would attend the games regularly just the same.

"That's the sport for youngsters. I don't believe in golf as a game for youth, because the lads of today need something more strenuous. Football, baseball, soccer, any sport that demands personal contact. Golf is for those advanced in years, who can no longer run bases or carry the pigskin. It gives them walking exercise and the use of muscles that otherwise would remain idle. Swinging clubs, of course, puts into play every part of the body."

Let Golf Links Alone

Chuck Evans says that golf clubs make a mistake in lengthening their courses for championships. Scott moved the tees back and stretched the course to more than 6,200 yards. Golfers that can drive the ball a long way have a distinct advantage. "Long drives compel the fellows whose drives are not so long to overpress, and by overpressing they drive wild. What a disaster a wild drive brings you on any course," says Evans. "Other golfers agree with him.

Sport Notes

Woman's place is the British channel.

University of Chicago sells season tickets for six home football games for $14.

Calling it a "world series" must impress the world as an example of typical American modesty.

Captain Walter Marks of the University of Chicago gridmen has developed exceptional skill as a forward passer.

Claude Rutin of Mexico City has held the tennis championship of that town 25 times. Rutin is forty-nine years of age.

Outfielder Tucker of the New Orleans Southern association club has been sold to the Washington American league baseball club.

The English channel swimming season is over and the strip of water has now returned to its regular job of being a bit of geography.

Fator brothers—Mark, twenty; Elmer, twenty-two; and Laverne, twenty-five—each weighing 105 pounds, are all jockeys with high standing.

Purchase of G. P. Lyons, pitcher for the Columbus club of the American association, is announced by the Detroit American league baseball club.

Construction of 7,000 additional seats in the Dallas park is under way and when completed will increase the seating capacity of the park to 20,000.

Lee Tanfhill, following a long and brilliant career on the baseball diamond, has dropped out of the game and has probably played his final contest.

Luther Roy, right-handed and leading pitcher of the Southern league with 24 wins and 10 defeats, has been sold by New Orleans to the Chicago Cubs.

Clarence Griffin, southpaw hurler on the Memphis team, chalked up his twentieth victory on the day it was announced that he had been sold to Brooklyn.

George Sargent, who won the open western golf championship in 1906, and his son, Alfred, form one of the greatest father and son combinations in the country.

Many of Europe's best auto racing drivers will invade American tracks next year in an effort to restore the prestige formerly held by auto manufacturers of the Old world.

"How to Look at a Golf Ball" is the title of a new book. The trouble is you have to look down on it and somehow the ball always seems to resist the lofty attitude.

Leroy Mahaffey, Pittsburgh's pitching recruit, is a husky six-footer and fine batter. He once made four home runs in a game while playing for the Columbia club in the South Atlantic league.

By winning the rowing championships of Canada, the United States, England and Australia in 1880, Ed Henton established himself as the first real champion of the world in any kind of sport.

For the first time in 24 years a Stanford vs. California major athletic contest will be held in San Francisco when the third game of the basketball series will be played in the Exposition auditorium March 5, 1927.

If there is much more channel swimming, New York will run out of keys to the city and have to leave the door open.

Fame is a funny thing. Another man swam the English channel, broke all previous records and didn't even make the first page.

Everett Scott, holder of baseball's record of consecutive games played, has been a member of five different major league clubs and has shared in six world's series "melons."

Paschal Good Utility

Ben Paschal, utility outfielder for the New York Yankees, has done some most excellent playing this season and stands a mighty good chance of a regular job whenever a vacancy occurs.

Says Concentration and Determination Will Win

There are women players who go up to the ball and put without any assistance, says Cecil Leitch. The results are so good at times that it makes the ordinary mortal wonder whether she ought to adopt a similar casual manner, but in the long run a combination of determination and concentration on the green will reap its reward.

Speaking of his own experience I am convinced that my mind is not on the task in hand half the time. I am endowed with a particularly keen sense of hearing and, when playing before a crowd, I constantly find myself listening to whispered remarks when I should be concentrating to an extent which would make this eavesdropping impossible.

I am constantly asked why I do not learn to putt, but few people realize how difficult it is to practice this part of the game. To my mind there is nothing simpler than to put approach puts stone dead and hole out with regularity from a reasonable distance when nothing is dependent upon the result.

It is a very different story in an important event, for then the yard put is doubly difficult and the long approach puts become terrifying.

Iowa College First to Place Turkey Day Ban

The beginning of a crusade against Thanksgiving day football by colleges has been announced by the Presbyterian Board of Christian Education.

The intent, it is said, is to educate the American public toward restoration of the fundamental observance of Thanksgiving day as an occasion for serious observance rather than as an athletic anniversary.

The first college to announce abandonment of its Thanksgiving football game is Parsons college, at Fairfield, Iowa, one of the 54 Presbyterian colleges in the United States. The annual Thanksgiving event at Parsons has been the game with Iowa Wesleyan.

It is anticipated that other Presbyterian colleges will follow suit when their officials have had opportunity to consider the suggestion of the educational board.

Purple Coach Says Pro Games Need Stabilizers

Before it can be on a par with the intercollegiate game, professional football will have to get coaches like Zuppke, Yost and Rockne, in the opinion of Glenn Thistlethwaite, North-western coach.

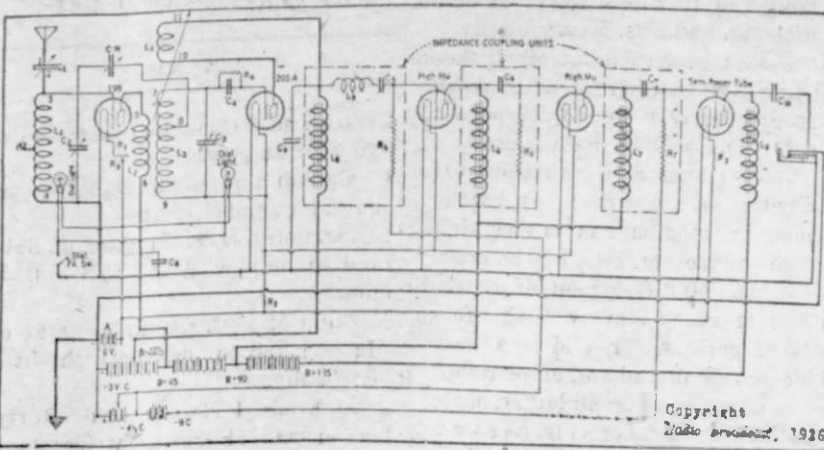

"The pro game needs stabilizers," Thistlethwaite says. "It has drawn large crowds in several instances, but it was the individual players and not the attraction of competing teams that created the interest.

"The professional game may some day be accepted with the same favor as the college game, but I believe that day is a long way off. Professional football needs more organization, a clean set of rules that will be lived up to and a schedule that must be followed."

Plan to Judge Umpires

A new system of judging baseball umpires has been advanced by Marty Krug, manager of the Los Angeles team. Krug suggests that the president of the league should get opinions from the eight managers regarding the ability of the various umpires, and, in addition, 12 players of "calm judgment" should also be asked their verdict. "You can't judge an umpire from the grandstand," Krug declares. Oth-er ball players agree with the Los Angeles manager.

RADIO

An Impedance-Coupled Brown-Drake Receiver.

If a careful analysis of the outstanding receiver circuits of the past twelve months is made, it is not unlikely that of them all there will be only a few that rate high in popular esteem by virtue of their excellence in performance. Of these few not many were patterned after other than the old regenerative detector frequency detector circuit. In most cases, receivers are what they are because of the individual type of apparatus employed, providing that, to start with, a good circuit is selected.

The Brown-Drake, not an exception to the rule, is one receiver that amply illustrates this principle. First described in Radio Broadcast, this circuit has stood the test of time remarkably well. The circuit itself is not revolutionary; just a simple tuned, with regenerative detector. To this may be added any type of audio amplifier that strikes the fancy of the listener because, with a good amplifier, the signal in the plate circuit of the detector tube may be amplified to the desired power and then outputted to a satisfactory loud speaker. In speaking so of the audio amplifier it is not the intent to belittle this very important section of a receiver; it is intended that emphasis be placed on that end of the receiver upon which we depend for the accomplishment of our tuning, for if that part of the receiver is not satisfactory the best audio amplifier in creation will not help matters.

The latest model of the Brown-Drake is the design of John E. Brennan, technical editor of Radio Broadcast Magazine, and is described by him in that publication.

The coils employed by the author are of a distinctly low-loss type, those specified being the special National Brown-Drake ones, space wound. However, it is a simple matter to construct the coils at home.

One problem in the design of a radio receiver has been to control volume of the output in the loud speaker. In cases where the volume control is incorporated in the audio amplifier channel of a receiver, some shifting of the audio frequency characteristics usually results when the control is varied.

This change is one direct cause of imperfection of quality. Some constructors place this volume control in the detector circuit; others in the radio-frequency amplifier circuit. In the Brown-Drake model described here the volume control, consisting of a variable 30-ohm resistance, is inserted in series with the filament ballast which regulates the flow of current to the radio-frequency tube. The advantages thus gained are two-fold: First, a very smooth control of volume is obtained without affecting the tone characteristic of the audio channel. Secondly, by placing the variable resistance in this position, overloading of the radio-frequency amplifier, especially on local station reception, is prevented. The control, at this point, enables the constructor to maintain a high degree of neutralization, which in turn allows of fine tuning without the probability of self-oscillation.

In the radio-frequency amplifier stage it was observed more perfectly and consistently than a 201-A tube. Also the actual gain for the 199 tube, taking into consideration the possibility of incomplete neutralization for the 201-A tube, was perhaps as much as with the latter, and is to be preferred in the final construction. In the detector circuit regeneration is obtained by the usual tickler method, whereby a movable coil is coupled to the secondary circuit. A 201-A tube is employed in this circuit.

For ease of assembly the National Impedance-formers were selected, although if it is so desired, any standard type of choke coil, condenser and grid leak may be substituted. The National Impedance-formers combine, in one unit, the choke coil, isolating condenser and grid leak; by means of convenient terminals should be inserted in ordinary plugs under them and pulling upward. Care should be taken, however, so as not to break the prong off.

Watch Lead Prongs on Your Radio Receiver

The lead prongs of the tube sometimes become corroded and thus impair proper reception. This can easily be remedied by cleaning them with an ordinary nail file. The prongs on the socket sometimes become bent down and thus the tube does not make proper contact with the socket. These socket prongs may be bent up again by inserting an ordinary hairpin under them and pulling upward. Care should be taken, however, so as not to break the prong off.

Use Good Tools

When making a serious study of the construction and experimentation of radio sets provision should be made for the necessary tools. Have these as good as can be afforded, for no good work can be done without good instruments. Learn how to use them and then use them right.

Light Incidental

The idea that the brighter a radio tube shines the better reception will be had is erroneous. The amount of light is no indication of the tube's sensitivity. The light of the bulb is an incidental feature of its operation.

A Suggestion

If the socket of a vacuum tube does not fit snugly around the base, wrap several thicknesses of strip paper cut to a width that is equal to the height of the base.

TWO FAMOUS WOMEN BORN IN SAME YEAR

Queen Victoria and Lydia E. Pinkham

MRS. ANNA MCHENRY 1008 E. PLUM STREET, MARSHALL, ILLINOIS

In the year 1819, two babies were born whose lives were destined to have a far-reaching influence. One was born in a stony castle of Old England, the other in a humble farmhouse in New England. Queen Victoria through her wisdom and kindness during a long and prosperous reign has become enthroned in the hearts of the British people. Lydia E. Pinkham through the merit of her Vegetable Compound has made her name a household word in thousands of American homes.

Marshall, Illinois.—"After my second child was born, I never saw a well day for five years. My father was telling his druggist about my condition, and the druggist insisted that father take a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and have me try it, as it had helped his wife. I had given up, but to please father and mother, I commenced taking your medicine and in a week I had begun to feel better. When I passed through the Change of Life, I was taking the Vegetable Compound, and I had no trouble of any kind."—Mrs. Anna McHenry, 1008 E. Plum St., Marshall, Illinois.

Another Woman Helped

Philadelphia, Penna.—Mrs. Caroline Nagy, of 2717 Sears St., in a recent letter to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., says that after her child was born she was in a very weak condition. She could not seem to regain her health and went to her mother for help. She told her to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as it had helped her when in like condition, and it has helped her mother also. So Mrs. Nagy started taking it. She felt better after taking the first bottle, after taking five bottles her weakness and other troubles disappeared, and she is never gone praising the Compound. In some families the fourth generation is learning the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

The Retort Discourteous

It is related that George Bernard Shaw, a few days after his twentieth birthday, was roped into a drawing room party of a rather glib nature, at which the special attraction was a violinist. Said the hostess to Mr. Shaw, after the violinist had rendered one or two numbers: "Well, Mr. Shaw, what do you think of my discovery?" Replied Mr. Shaw: "I find in him a great resemblance to Paderewski." A painful pause. Then, "But, Mr. Shaw, Paderewski is not a violinist." "Exactly!" snapped G. B. S.—New Yorker.

Lava Blanket Takes

Long Time to Cool

The last lava flow from Mount Mauna Loa—on the island of Hawaii—occurring nearly five months ago—is still so hot that it has not been possible to dig away that portion which buried the government road at Hooiupou to restore the old asphalt macadam highway.

That was an interesting bit of information presented by Hugh Howell, one of the Engineering association's members, in a talk at one of the organization's luncheons.

It will be several months hence, it is estimated, before the lava which poured forth from one side of the famous volcanic mountain in spectacular fashion will have cooled sufficiently to permit restoration of the original road, Howell said.

That is due to the remarkable insulating qualities of the outer coating of lava until it has cooled. It took the Alaka flow, which occurred in 1910, a comparatively short distance from the recent outburst, a full year to cool, Howell said.—Square and Transit.

Music Nerve in Foot,

Swiss Scientist Says

According to the Swiss scientist, Hoeppli, the nerve center which registers and transmits the reaction to the pleasure we experience in hearing music is situated in the foot at a point just under the bend of the metatarsals, the five bones between the ankle and the bones of the toe. The nerve spot, which reacts to musical rhythm also is situated in the feet close to the first phalanx or big toe.

This, says M. Hoeppli, explains why the majority of people listening to music insistently and quite unconsciously beat time with their feet. The bunch of nerves controlling the faculty to dance rhythmically lies in the tarsus along the bone known anatomically as the "astragal" or the "ballista."

M. Hoeppli does not explain how he reached these curious discoveries and does not substantiate them. It is stated that he also is an accomplished musician.

Even-Handed Justice

The Manchester (England) Guardian writes: "The Hull coroner, who censured himself in court for failing to call certain essential evidence, is not the first legal officer to pass judgment on his own shortcomings."

A year or two ago an English magistrate in East Africa, when hunting, found that he had shot a female elephant, which it was not legal to shoot. Being a man of sensitive conscience, he reviewed the crime and fined himself a substantial sum. Later he discovered that other shooters of female elephants had got off much more lightly, and so, as culprit, he appealed against his own decision as magistrate, asking that the fine should be reduced. The appeal court, however, upheld the sentence in its entirety.

"Gosh!—that old dog is a sight!" said a hypercritical acquaintance, from over beyond Presbyterlan Hill. "He's lame, skinny, blind in one eye, and 'pears to have ticks all over him. He looks as if he had been scalded, too."

South Converts Own Cotton

In 1890 the South used in its own industries 200,000 bales of cotton, but in 1925 the number of bales manufactured in sight of the cotton fields was 4,000,000, showing the tremendous increase in industrial activity in the South. Last year there were 17,000,000 active spindles in the southern mills against 16,000,000 active spindles in the North. In 1900 there were only 4,000,000 spindles in the South against 14,400,000 in the North.

ERNST C. WRUCKE DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE FOR CONGRESS

The farming industry needs substantial aid and there are many ways in which this aid may be extended, according to Ernst C. Wrucke of Horicon Democratic candidate for Congress.

"The farming industry may be aided in many ways by legislation," said Mr. Wrucke to a newspaper reporter, "and the condition of his markets strengthened. When asked for an instance, Mr. Wrucke said: "The greatest problem of the present day farmer is his finances. Banking organizations of Wisconsin and other states are doing all they can to help the farming industry. It is admitted that the Federal Loan Banks have been a wonderful help. I believe that this system could be extended to greater help. I would suggest that the government issue bonds for a separate fund. These bonds may draw 4 per cent interest and would find a ready market. The money thus obtained could then be loaned to farmers through the Federal Loan Banks at an interest rate of 4 1/2% and it is believed that the quarter of a per cent interest would be sufficient to defray the expense and such an arrangement would be of untold benefit to the farming industry. This would have a tendency to increase farm land values and would save our banks and investors large sums of money that is now being lost through foreclosures.

"Then there is the tariff. The original intention of our tariff laws was to protect American industry from foreign competition to such a measure as to permit the American farmer and laborer to make a living for himself and family according to American standards. While the tariff is a difficult problem, yet it could be so arranged as to be of as much benefit to agriculture as to other lines of industry."—Advertisement.

CANDIDATE FOR STATE SENATOR

John A. Schwalbach of South Germantown, one of the best known residents of Washington county, and who for many years was connected in an official capacity with the Germantown Farmers Mutual Fire Insurance Co., is a candidate for state senator for the Dodge-Washington counties district. Herman Bilgrien is the present senator. Mr. Schwalbach is a man who is competent for the office, has a reputation clean and unswerving, and would, if elected, prove an official who would look well to the interests of farmers, laborers, businessmen and manufacturers. He is not a member of any clique or gang and is free to act as his conscience dictates. His nomination is one which ought to be given wholehearted support.

Don't Waste Your Milk!

The amount of milk spilt, soured, rejected and otherwise wasted, is enormous. But the more serious losses to the individual dairyman are the non-paying members of their milk herds, and the losses due to unsanitary milk production. Dairy men have discovered the advantages that lie in swatting the bacteria by prompt cooling to 60 degrees or under, keeping dust and dirt out of the milk by brushing the flanks and udders of milch cows, sterilizing milk utensils, and last of all storing the milk in a properly constructed milk house. As time goes on the unavoidable waste of milk will be more than offset by intelligent feeding, complete sanitation, proper cooling and storing and more efficient herd management.
