Measuring a Man's Blood

Recent tests have shown that when a man gives a quart of blood for a transfusion he parts with more than a fourth of his entire life stream. The average healthy man possesses an amount of blood that is 4.9 per cent, or about one-twentieth of his total weight; thus, if you weigh 160 pounds, you have about eight pounds of blood—a little less than four quarts. The quantity of blood was determined by injecting dye into each subject's circulation. Three minutes later samples of the blood were taken. The extent to which the dye had been diluted showed the amount of blood possessed.

To hide disappointment is high art.

Business Contacts No Longer Made on Links

Golf is losing out as a business getter. Since the habit of playing has become nearly universal among executives, mere common interest in the sport no longer brings individuals together. Devotion to the game has become so general that it has lost its competitive advantage as a business asset to a large extent.

In the early days of the ancient Scottish game, when golf players were few in number, a common interest in the same hobby made buddies out of bankers and customers, lawyers and clients. Now golf—like all non-business activities—serves merely to create an attitude of friendliness and to break down the formality of purely business contacts. But a mere capacity to play golf is no longer enough to bring in business. In this sense, the collateral advantages of golf have been overdone. Popularity breeds innocuousness.

Incidentally, the tremendous expansion of facilities for playing golf in this country is tending to keep many men of wealth, who formerly went abroad each year, at home in the summer.—Nation's Business.

In No Hurry to Marry
Nine years after it had been issued, a marriage license was returned for filing in the office of the District court clerk at Minneapolis, Minn. The license was obtained September 21, 1918, by Joseph Gardner and Agnes Quinn. On October 8 they were married, but would not tell why the license was not used before.

Kansas Memorial Stadium

The University of Kansas recently celebrated the completion of its new $548,000 memorial stadium which seats 36,000 persons in the concrete stands. Temporary bleachers will bring the capacity to 40,000. The stadium was built from funds totaling some $175,000 in donations by students, alumni and friends in a drive for a war memorial fund, the remainder being obtained from receipts from athletic outsets.

The Kansas stadium was built in units, the first being completed in 1921, the second in 1925, and the final one this fall.

Landscaping still remains to be done at the stadium. In the foreground of the above picture are shown eight of the twenty tennis courts which make up the athletic facilities in the vicinity of the stadium.

Great Golf Exhibition Planned for Great Neck

Plans recently were made at the Lakeville Golf and Country club at Great Neck, L. I., for a unique contest.

Members of the Lakeville club, endorsed over the exhibition, announced that they were prepared to sponsor a match next year in which Smith, Sarazen, Armour and Farrell are to play any other four professionals in the world for a side bet of $10,000, the club agreeing to put up the money.

It is considered likely that such a match will be arranged for next spring. Efforts will be made to have Walter Hagen, western open champion and P. G. A. winner in 1925 and again in 1926, captain a team to oppose the quartette that played at Great Neck recently. It is also quite likely that there will be a return match between the winners and losers and also a match between Farrell and Sarazen next spring.

Captain Harry Wilson

The photograph shows Capt. "Light-foreman" Harry Wilson of the West Point football team who has had a very successful season with the pig skin.

Discard Huddle System to Avoid Hot Debates

The famous huddle system of calling signals is likened to a hall of debate and therefore relegated to the junk heap by Coach Harry Gamage of the University of Kentucky.

His adoption of the old straight method of indicating plays was a surprising move to football fans, for Bob Zuppke, Illinois coach, the fountain of football knowledge from which Gamage drank his learning, has used the huddle consistently.

"In the past," Gamage explains, "Kentucky teams have been in the habit of questioning the quarterback's judgment in calling certain plays, and the huddle afforded a splendid opportunity for them to enter a debate. There will be no debaters on my team."

"Falling Down Practice" Is Latest in Football

A football player spends so much of his playing time on the ground or on his way down that both "Bill" Roper of Princeton and Tad Jones of Yale made "falling down practice" a part of their training routine.

Roper's men lined up before each scrimmage and fell in unison several times, after which they paired off and took turns spilling each other. Jones had his men do a series of ground dives and handstands as they took the field for the kick-off at the start of a game.

Plan Way in Which to Avoid Tie Grid Games

A plan to do away with disputed football championships, resulting from tie games, is under way by officials of the Nebraska high school conference.

It is proposed that six alternate plays be given to each team in a tied fray after the expiration of the regular playing period. The team that gains most yardage in the six plays would be proclaimed the victor.

The plan has been tried in Colorado. All question as to what team is champion is eliminated by this method.

Edvin Wide Hurt

Edvin Wide, famous Swedish runner, has suffered a knee injury, according to information from Sweden, which may keep him out of track competition for some time. Neither Wide, Paavo Nurmi, his Finnish rival, nor Dr. Otto Peltzer, noted German middle-distance star, are expected to come to the United States for the indoor track season, foregoing invitations to do so in preference to focusing on preparations for the Olympic games at home.

Sport Notes

Life is just one football upset after another.

What do prizefighters think about between fights?

What football really needs is a rule regulating cheer leaders.

Jack still has a bright future, getting licked once a year at $450,000.

In the Scandinavian countries all big athletic events are scheduled on Sundays.

The Montreal Golf club, organized in 1873, was the first club of its kind in America.

The great game of football is threatened. There seems to be a shortage of coonskin coats.

Buddy Myer, best known as an infielder, may play the outfield for the Red Sox next year.

In the first Yankee series with the Pirates, in Tripoli, Commodore Preble had Miller Huggins' job.

Dr. John W. Wilce, in his 15 years at Ohio State, has given the Buckeyes three football championships.

"I see," said the unreconciled Dempsyite, "that this Tooney has arranged to sit out a couple more fights."

You can learn almost anything at our large universities nowadays except the second verse of the football anthem.

The Newark Bears of the International league have again selected Pensacola, Fla., as their spring training base.

Toronto has so many golfers of the fair sex that one of the clubs has decided to hold a junior tournament for girls under twenty-one.

One of the very minor mysteries is how 40 or 50 football players of assorted lengths all turn up in the official program as 6 feet tall.

"Interference" seems such a weak word to describe the 100-pound half-back who pushes a cubic yard of shoulder into the tackle's equator.

Yale has the first authentic record of college football in America in an annual freshman-sophomore match, which became an institution in 1840.

Soldiers stationed at Fort Sam Houston, Texas, are to play golf. Work has been started on a regulation nine-hole course to give the army men recreation.

When the football season is over, and once more son has come through it with a whole skin and no broken bones, mother herself is almost inclined to give nine rals.

Wilbur Marx, sixteen-year-old high school boy, won the log-rolling championship of the world at the tenth annual international tournament held recently near Washburn, Wis.

St. Joseph, Mo., hears the baseball bell buzzing around again. Latest reports from the Drummer city are that the Lincoln club of the Western league will be moved there for 1928.

A New York theatrical weekly says that when the Warner boys were asked by a vaudeville booker what they could do, Paul replied, "We play ukulele, saxophone, right and center field."

Michael J. Donohue, director of athletics and football coach at Louisiana State university, Baton Rouge, La., recently signed a contract to continue his duties for six more years. He is reported drawing $10,000 a year salary.

That Uncle Wilbert Robinson, manager of the Brooklyn Robins, holds Dave Bancroft in high esteem, is evidenced by the fact that the former Brave skipper, who recently cast his lot with Brooklyn, is to be captain of the Robins next year.

Fred T. Dawson, coach of Denver's eleven, coached three Missouri valley champions while at Nebraska.

Zach Wheat, who was released recently by the Athletics, played in the major leagues since 1910.

Humphries' Career

Fifty-nine years old, Joe Humphries has a record of 37 years in a squared ring without ever a scrambled ear to show for it. Humphries, whose wavy arms and strident voice are familiar to every follower of fights in New York, has served in the non-combatant role of announcer at 2,500 battles, including nearly all the big championship events except the two Timpany-Dempsey scraps. It is something unusual for Humphries to work outside of New York.

AWARD JUDGMENT TO DICK BUTLER
Given $2,500 for His Efforts in English Fight.

An echo of the Tom Gibbons-Jack Bloomfield fight at Wembley stadium, London, in August, 1924, resounded in New York fistic circles the other day, when Dick Butler, well known in pugilistic and political affairs, was awarded a judgment of $2,500 against Eddie Kane, manager of Gibbons and Sammy Mandell, lightweight champion.

Butler claimed the $2,500 as a commission or fee for his efforts in the early negotiations, which resulted in making the match. Judge Harmon Black of the Supreme court agreed with Butler without sending the case to the jury, despite the earnest testimony of Charles Harvey, manager of Tom Heeney, on behalf of Kane.

The Butler judgment adds another unfortunate "break" to the long string suffered by Kane and Gibbons in their invasion of England three years ago. Gibbons was to have received $50,000 for fighting Bloomfield, but according to Kane's testimony, the most he got was $24,000. It was reported at the time of the bout that Gibbons and Kane only received $15,000.

The Gibbons-Bloomfield match fell far below expectations, both as a fight and financial venture. British experts believed that Bloomfield might break the rules of the Beckett school and remain erect rather than horizontal while in the ring. It was thought that Bloomfield could sleep in a bed which had not been sprinkled with resin dust to make him feel at ease.

In his training camp he passed the test of hearing the clang of doorbells and alarm clocks without crashing instinctively to a horizontal posture. In the first two rounds against Gibbons, Bloomfield remained perpendicular, but this was largely because Gibbons managed to keep his itching gloves from Bloomfield's chin.

At the opening of the third round Gibbons signaled friends at the ring-side that it was time to go home. Then he smacked Bloomfield on the chin and another British heavyweight was in his natural position of repose, his shoulder blades on his canvas mattress.

Sir Thomas Lipton Taken for Steward

The yachting cap affected by Sir Thomas Lipton proved a money maker for the multimillionaire while en route to the United States aboard the Leviathan.

A woman passenger, presumably newsighted, called Sir Thomas to her deck chair.

"Steward," she said, "will you please bring me a rug?"

Without comment Sir Thomas found the desired blanket and brought it to the woman.

"Thank you," and she tipped him 50 cents.

Sir Thomas bowed low and walked away. He kept the half dollar.

Coach Gwinn Henry

The photograph shows Coach Gwinn Henry, who teaches the gridiron game for Missouri. Henry has been successful in the valley conference, and his teams have won titles in various years. Henry learned his football at the University of Texas.

"Foolproof" Timepiece for Football Officials

The "foolproof" timepiece, constructed for use by football officials and adopted recently at Western conference games, has gained a foothold in the East. For the first time, the new watch was introduced at a Harvard contest when Horween's eleven met Indiana. J. J. Lipp, the designer, was one of the officials at the game.

The timer consists of two separate mechanisms, one for registering the time of play and the other for recording time out. The watch has a 75-minute dial, representing the four 15-minute periods and the 15-minute intermission between halves.

In addition, notations appear on the dial to remind officials of their duties under the rules at specific intervals. There is a log control for starting and stopping each movement, the snap back to zero is by a stem press with a safe locking device which prevents losing the time even if the watch is dropped or hit by the ball.

Humphries' Career

Fifty-nine years old, Joe Humphries has a record of 37 years in a squared ring without ever a scrambled ear to show for it. Humphries, whose wavy arms and strident voice are familiar to every follower of fights in New York, has served in the non-combatant role of announcer at 2,500 battles, including nearly all the big championship events except the two Timpany-Dempsey scraps. It is something unusual for Humphries to work outside of New York.

Smart Fabric Combinations

Among the smartest combinations of fabrics seen in frocks is transparent velvet used with georgette crepe or with satin.

Broader Shoulders

Topcoats for morning and town wear are broadening across the shoulders by Parisian decree. Italian sleeves are featured in the models of leading sports houses, and many coats have sleeves sewed on to a new shoulder in semi-raglan effect.

"MILLINERY CONFECTIONS" AGAIN
NOVELTY VELVET SCORES HIGH

THE theory that millinery "undorned is adorned the most" is passing. After so long a period of exaggerated simplicity, the feminine love for the beautiful asserts itself and once more we are to be batted in "millinery confections" that are beguiling in detail as well as flattering in becomingness.

Evidently it is devoting upon the little brimless types to convey the message of more charm, more artful handcraft, more novelty for millinery of the future. At any rate they are doing a noble part toward creating a vogue of greater elaboration.

From the millinery collection here pictured, it will readily be seen that hats for midwinter wear are coming out strong in point of glitter and color and intriguing handwork as well as unique design.

The interesting item about the black velvet toque at the top of the group is its curious animal ornament of rhinestones. These quaint jeweled dogs, such as shown here, also lizards, beetles and the like, are very much in fashion. They are really extremely smart and so ornamental that little or no other trimming is required.

A clever thing about the other hats here shown is the unique side-dip or wraps, formal or informal costume ensembles sports or dressy, from collages to hats, bags, shoes or soft cushions, emphasis is placed on velvet in the mode—and would you believe it, Paris is now designing parcels of velvet for resort use. Note this, too, if you please, in regard to the prestige of velvet among fashionable—a census of evening gowns worn at the premiere of grand opera this season in our own metropolitan cities, declares the fact the more than half were of velvet.

Furthermore velvet is writing new pages into its history which has to do with startling novelty and diversity, which is another reason why we are so intensely interested in this beloved material. Just now young girls are getting a thrill out of cutting short jackets made of multi-colored tulle print, after the manner of the "bling" model which the charming and well-known cinema artist, M. M.

Attractive Ensemble and Velvet Coat

Nixon, is wearing (to the left) in this picture. This attractive ensemble stresses a pencil lined one-piece dress with a jacket fashioned of gray fur velvet, the patterning being very daring and very smart. That most youthful-looking fur, gray squirrel, is used for the rolling collar. The very essence of chic is expressed in its costume.

Reptile printed velvet is another of the season's sensations. Some of the most effective coats turned out recently are made of these very new and very fascinating reptile prints. The one in the picture is colored, cuffed and bordered with seal fur for trimmings are the thing just now. An inset of this novelty reptile-marked velvet extends down the front of the dress from neckline to the skirt.

Not only are novelty velvets popular for coat and jacket, but for the blouse they bespeak all that is up-to-the-minute in smartness.

One of the most successful afternoon costumes at this moment poses a blouse of multi-colored velvet over a skirt of sheer black velvet, topped with a head-fitting cap of black velvet.

Order of Notice of Final Settlement
STATE OF WISCONSIN—WASHINGTON COUNTY COURT—In Probate.
In the matter of the estate of Amelia Buddenhagen, deceased.
On application of Arthur Buddenhagen, executor of the estate of said Amelia Buddenhagen, deceased, for the adjustment and allowance of his administration account, and the assignment of the residue of said estate to such other persons as are by law entitled to the same.
It is ordered, that said account be examined and allowed at a special term of said court, to be held at the Court House in the city of West Bend, in said county, on the third Tuesday of December, A. D. 1927.
It is further ordered, that upon the adjustment and allowance of such account by the court, as aforesaid, the residue of said estate be by the court assigned to such persons as are by law entitled to the same.
It is further ordered, that notice of the time and place of the examination and allowance of such account and of the assignment of the residue of said estate be given to all persons interested by publication of said notice or a copy of this order for three successive weeks before said day in the Kewaskum Statesman, a weekly newspaper printed at Kewaskum, in said county. Dated November 15, 1927.
By the Court,

Idle Island

By ETHEL HUESTON

STORY FROM THE START

The voice of nervous collapse overtook Gay DeBowdoin, New York artist, when he stepped ashore at Idle Island. She was the "Long Pine," a slender, wind-blown character, the sister of Alice DeBowdoin, the administrator.

CHAPTER IV—Continued

How can you have me in a nutshell, said dynamiter, burner and any anybody you want to see Rand's home." Gay was about to reply when she asked, "What, Rand comes?" "When Rand comes," she said, "he had never felt sufficient to inquire, 'And who is Rand?'" "Many times again would Gay have heard those words, but never without a thrill of personal interest and joy.

The Present Captain, He Explained Carefully, Was Really His Great-Uncle.

deep in thought. The island seemed changed to her, warmer, softer. She felt vaguely troubled, vaguely pleased, strangely stirred. When her thoughts turned to the amazing young man and her surprising encounter with him her lips curved into tremulous smiles and her eyes brightened with pleased expectancy. She shook her head at herself warningly. She was not deceived. She knew these symptoms. She liked but feared them also.

CHAPTER V

Randolph Wallace indeed stood for everything in the world of which Gay DeBowdoin professedly disapproved. It was not merely that he did not work, but he disapproved of it on principle. He objected vigorously to the enlightenment of doing, which was Gay's god. He declared stoutly that labor in itself was a childish, ineffective thing, that the need for it was a confession of inferiority, that joy in the accomplishment was not merely the sure mark of a narrow nature, lacking vision.

"Because there is so much to do," she cried intensely. "Because I want to accomplish something in the world, get something done. Because I want to work, work hard, and work well—Why don't you?" she ended mildly. "Because life is too rare and fine a thing to be devoted to the mere grimy physical effort of doing this or doing that. Soul is too frail and too delicate to be enslaved in the chains of daily toil for board and keep."

"You are blotting out my sunshine," she said. "I was bringing it," he returned impudently. "Don't get up. I always come right in." He suited action to his words, and came and sat in the window-seat close to her elbow. Gay turned about in her chair and regarded him pleasantly. "Is Auntalmiry here?" he asked apologetically. "No, she isn't. Isn't she at the Apple Tree?" "Well, I didn't really stop to see. I thought I'd better inquire here first. So she isn't here. Dear, dear, all that long walk for nothing."

Iconoclasm

We get pretty mad at the earnest, go-getting talk about modern efficiency in charity, as if the two things were compatible, but that expression, selling religion, makes us madder than anything else in this world, wide, beautiful world, bar none, while it is saying a good deal.—Ohio State Journal.

"It wouldn't hurt you to go to college." "Going to college would be simple enough. I had to go through—I did. —Bowdoin. I hated to go there, I was afraid I'd turn out a poet. I thought it was required for graduation. But Gramp was dead set on Bowdoin. Well, I went. It did me no harm. I've never even written verse libre. Though sometimes I feel it come over me all of a sudden—I feel it now when I look at you."

When he said at last, reluctantly, that he must go and see Auntalmiry she went with him to the door. "Come again," she told him pleasantly; "come often."

Later in the evening, Gay went down to the Pler grocery store. On every lip was the laughing word, "Rand's home." But whereas before she had taken no notice, now she experienced acute interest, paused breathlessly at the name, and drank in every word that fell from native lips on the subject of Randolph Wallace. The combustion of the union between Manhattan and the state of Maine was not entirely approved on the island, she gathered, but altogether loved, although the island never openly acknowledges this love.

As the dusk fell she went out, alone, unafraid into the little whispering forest, and walked up and down, slowly, their fingers touched, and their eyes met lingeringly. Rand's speculatively smiling, Gay's a little cloudy. As they drank their coffee slowly she studied him furtively, noted his easy slouch in the comfortable window-seat, marked the brown arm of the window-seat. But she avoided meeting the merry gray eyes beneath the dark up-curling lashes.

"Do you flirt, Mr. Wallace?" she asked suddenly. "Hope to tell you I do," he answered warmly. "Oh! Then you need no warning. We have quite a wicked little flirt in the neighborhood, and I was going to warn you. But since you do, you can take care of yourself."

"Oh, I thought you meant yourself. I thought it was a sort of 'Help Wanted' like the newspaper ads. I was willing to apply."

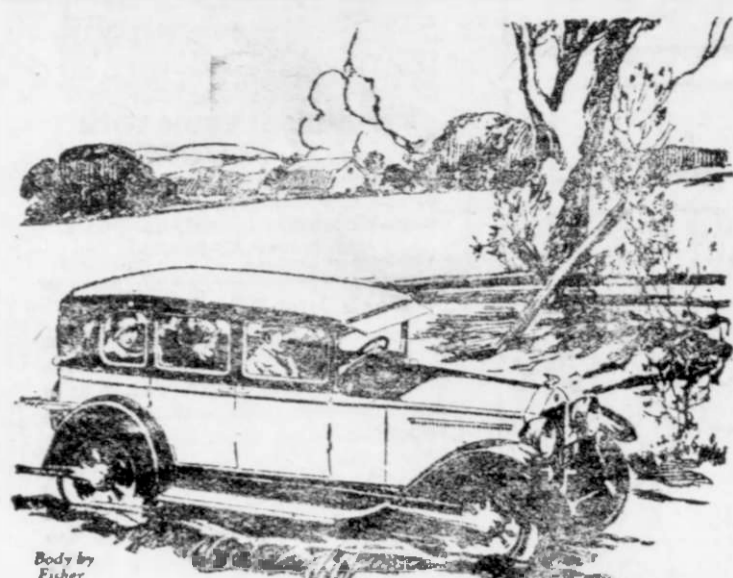

"To one like Gay, whose religion was work, whose god accomplishment, it came as a distinct shock to know that this one, with the strong hands, the ready wit and the smiling eyes, was an idler, a dawdler on the face of the earth, that he had no profession and wanted none, no business and was glad of it, no ambition and delighted in its absence. He called himself a retired gentleman, and said it was a poor island that couldn't support at least one; in fact, he said, the entire state of Maine united to support him."

"But don't you do anything? You don't just loaf, do you?" "Loaf! Certainly not. Bums loaf. Landed gentlemen—retire."

Gay scrutinized him gravely, remarked the muscular arms, the straight shoulders, the vigorous tan, the deep and understanding eyes. And he was an idler in this rugged land! She shook her head regretfully. "A world full of things to be done," she said slowly. "And you do nothing?" He explained that for ten weeks he had been doing the coast of Canada with a photographer in a fishing schooner, getting pictures. He had returned to the island to finish up a little work he was doing, on a motor launch, for Bemis, a lumber man at Bangor. He was to get the boat ready, and with a couple of men as crew, take it to Miami in readiness for Bemis when he went down for the winter season later on. He had expected to finish the job on the island, he said, in three days, but now he was beginning to feel it would take him a week.

He said he had gone with MacMillan on one of his trips to the Arctic, had been to the Arctic circle twice, in fact, but he didn't like it. Said it was too cold. Wished somebody would plant the next pole in Florida or Mexico, nice warm place to look for things. He had been in the World War, and served overseas seven months. He said he did not like that either.

BUT LITTLE CAPITAL REQUIRED

Producing milk is a business that requires a comparatively small investment, when compared to other features of modern farm work. It does not require any heavy outlay for equipment, and where a farmer is content to grow into the business, it only requires a few years before he has a herd of dairy cows worth considerable money. A few good cows, cans and milk utensils, can start a farmer on the high road to financial success, providing he takes proper care of his cows and weeds out the non-producers. Naturally, as in any other business, care of his product is one condition of his success. A quality product is the only one that will stand the test of time, and this is especially true with as perishable a product as milk. Cleanliness and good care from the time it leaves the udder of the cow, until delivered to the customer is part of the price of success.
