EXCELLENT WOMAN PASSES AWAY

Mrs. William Olwin, a well known resident of Kewaskum, was found dead at her home on East Main street Wednesday evening by Chief of Police George F. Brandt. The sad news of her death came as a great shock to everyone who knew her. She was a noble woman, one who always spoke a kind word for all. She always found great pleasure in attending strictly to her household duties. Mrs. Olwin was one of those types of women whom it was a pleasure to meet and become acquainted with. The entire community extends heartfelt sympathy to the surviving relatives in their hour of deep affliction.

KEWASKUM LOSES OPENING GAME

Before a large crowd of enthusiastic fans, the Kewaskum Athletic baseball team lost its first game of the season on the local diamond with Ashford by a score of 8 to 12. Outside of the weather being rather chilly, the day proved to be an ideal one for baseball. The opening game of the season for the Wa-Fon-Do league here was begun by music played on the streets and at the ball park furnished by a brass band. Theo. Schmidt, president of the village, was the first man to throw the ball across the plate, after which the game started with Heberer on the mound and Kral at the receiving end for the locals. Up to fifth inning Heberer pitched good ball allowing a few scattered hits, after this he weakened and was then replaced by Ramthun who pitched the remainder of the game.

This being the first game that the Kewaskum team has played in five or six years, none of the members of the team having played together before, we must admit that, although the game was marred with costly errors, the locals put up a nice game, and it is conceded by the fans, that the team is bound to develop a good team from the material to be picked from the Ashford team. It is one of the strongest in the league, having played together for over two years.

Next Sunday the locals will play Brownsville at Brownsville.

RIOTS IN KENTUCKY BRING STATE GUARD

Harlan, Ky.—More than 300 members of the Kentucky National Guard, armed with rifles and machine guns and accompanied by a tank, marched on the coal fields near Everts, Harlan county, where labor disorders have cost several lives and much destruction of property.

Slaying of Five Reported at Harlan Coal Mines.

Most of the troops assembled at London, then proceeded to Pineville, where they were joined by detachments from other cities. Commanding officers at a conference at London planned their campaign against what Gov. Flem D. Sampson called a "reign of terror precipitated by Communists and Reds" in the mining region.

The troops joined in a combined march from Pineville to Harlan and thence to Everts. Reports were that some women and children had left; men, many armed, congregated in the streets, listening to speeches from their leaders.

Soon after Sheriff J. H. Blair and Circuit Judge D. C. Jones had said they feared trouble before arrival of the guardsmen, two terrific blasts reverberated through the hills in the direction of Everts. Deputy sheriffs were sent in an effort to locate the blasts. Other peace officers previously had been dispatched to Everts to augment the force on duty there.

The decision to send troops was reached at a conference of representatives of Governor Sampson and organized labor. William Turnblazer, district president of the United Mine Workers of America, said the agreement provided mine guards be disbanded and their commissions revoked.

The conferees said the agreement also stipulated that no additional laborers or strike breakers be sent into the coal field. The Red Cross has promised relief to unemployed miners, they said, after the region is patrolled by the troops.

Col. Dan M. Carroll, Louisville, is in command of the troops. Under him are Lieut. Col. Sidney Smith and Maj. George M. Chescheir, both of Louisville.

SURVEY OF BUSINESS SHOWS IMPROVEMENT

Washington.—"Another month without decline" is the optimistic title of the monthly survey of business issued a few days ago by the American Federation of Labor.

"Business is showing more resistance to depression forces," the survey declares. "The spring season even brought a slight advance, and for the first time since the decline began in July, 1920, indexes of business activity have risen for two months in succession."

"The gains are too small to signal the start of a revival, but they at least show that the decline has been checked for another month."

Explaining that the months from May to July are normally months of slight decline, the survey asserts that "the best that we can expect is a smaller decline than usual."

"If the present gains can be held," it is stated, "the chances are good for a clear road ahead in the fall."

The survey first lists the influences likely to retard recovery and finds among these that the building industry is not ready to start forward; reduced buying power has resulted in a lack of demand for houses and apartments in the most important cities; the steel industry sees orders declining, its best customers—construction, automobiles, and railroads, are not taking large supplies; prices are still going down; the stock market is declining; the purchasing power of farmers and wage earners is low and wage cuts are threatened.

"These are serious rocks in the road upward," the survey admits, but then declares, "Construction factors are strong."

"The textile industry has already started up," it explains. "Demand for automobiles has increased and the industry is slowly increasing production. Factories and mines are producing less than the public consumes, so that supplies must eventually be used up and production must increase before long. Business has abandoned some of its speculative undertakings and unsound practices and should be in good condition to go ahead."

"These are fundamental changes for the better."

The improvement in unemployment is not as rapid as had been hoped, it is stated, but "gains are held." It is estimated that between 5,500,000 and 6,000,000 wage earners are still without work or on layoff. Since January, however, 19.8 per cent of union members were unemployed, employment conditions have improved and the estimated percentage for April was 18.7.

"The greatest danger now," the survey continues, "is reaction and loss of confidence."

It then goes on: "While there have been recurring suggestions of wage cuts it is significant that they come chiefly from bankers. Industrial executives of larger undertakings are defending the high wage principle. These industrialists take the same position that the federation has long taken—wage cuts curtail buying which is essential to business recovery."

"Employers feel the pressure of prolonged depression and are doubtful of the future. But wage reductions now would be most dangerous. They would add a disorganizing element just when conditions are beginning to stabilize. Those who make wage cuts find it necessary to conceal the cut or apologize. It is evident the high wage principle has rooted itself deeply in business thinking in the last eight years. Widespread wage cuts would undoubtedly postpone recovery."

All that was needed to make the charming dress shown to the left in the picture a "perfect dream" of a gown was the piquant little velvet ruffles and fluffies on bodice and skirt. THE CRANDALLS AND THE STENDHALS

By FANNIE HURST

THE house of the Crandalls in Wittger street was one of those massive brick-and-stone affairs that looked as if it had been built and passed on for a few generations from father to son. And so it had, except in the case of the Crandall branch now in occupancy, it had been a case of from father to daughter.

Martha Crandall had married Deeping Johnson in her father's home and remained there after her marriage, and after the death of the elder Crandall.

Martha Crandall Johnson's daughter Adeline had been born in that same house, in the same stodge, high-ceiling, wall-to-wall bedroom in which she herself was born.

You felt about the house of the Crandalls that the people who inhabited it had not made their money overnight, so to speak. Crandalls, ever since Crandalls had lived there, had been able to afford the substantial things of life.

Little Adeline Crandall Johnson grew up in that environment, as blithely as if the somber old house had been a rose garden. She flitted through its halls. She danced through its dark corridors as brilliantly as a butterfly, caught in some strange netherworld environment.

She was something quite so alien to them and yet so incalculably fascinating. She had been born in the chill autumns of their lives, when Martha was forty-two and her husband fifty. Almost any way you looked at her she was a phenomenon, the last creature in the world you would have expected to spring from the union of two such angular souls at Martha Crandall and Deeping Johnson.

Unconscious of the incongruity of her young presence in the deep brown plush of the Crandall-Johnson environment, Adeline rushed into the flush of her adolescence.

By this time the Crandall-Johnsons were at the peak of the financial history of all the Crandalls who had occupied that house on Wittger street. Not only had Martha come into a vaster than ever accumulation of Crandall's monies, but Deeping Johnson had practically cornered one of the most important cotton markets in the history of the industry.

When Adeline Crandall Johnson was seventeen she was heiress to seven million dollars. More than that, and with an obsolete kind of solemnity of which they were totally unconscious, the parents of Adeline had picked out for her in marriage the son of another local millionaire. It was one of those predetermined affairs about which there had not been much family discussion. It is doubtful if Adeline herself, in those years when she and the fat young boy were so consciously sent to dancing school together, was even conscious of the import of what was happening.

Certainly she never took Donald Dugan seriously enough to even resent him. The fact that at seventeen and eighteen they were unofficially considered engaged, glanced off her bright young conscience with scarcely an impact.

One night, however, in the great deep brown plush parlor, the young Dugan, probably on the crest of his first fierce wave of adolescence, caught her into his short round arms and kissed her wetly, patly, roundly, and with possessiveness on the lips.

Four weeks later Adeline Crandall Johnson eloped with her music teacher. For three months the great, solemn, brown doors were closed to Adeline and her slender blond husband. Then solemnly, inevitably and rather terribly, with the news that Adeline was with child, they swung open, taking into the silent maw of that house on Wittger street, the young figures of Adeline and Jacques Stendhal.

Promptly it engulfed them. Promptly the solemnity of that environment flowed around them in rivers brown as mud. The young Frenchman who had married Adeline because to him she was a flower almost too sweet to pluck, pulled in the beginning against the drag of this environment.

But in the end he, too, began to succumb. By the time Adeline's baby girl was born, the young pair were part and parcel of the house located on Wittger street.

It cannot be said for Jacques Stendhal that he was of the stuff that parents would select as the husband of a loved daughter. He was a frail fellow, probably in character, too. A constitutional dilettante, unstable by nature, playful, and in a way that was forever to be adorable to Adeline, dependent upon her for decision.

Then, too, he loved her. There was no doubt of that. This volatile Frenchman, full of traditions that were alien to the very life and being of Adeline, had one quality of stability that was impeccable.

He loved Adeline. It was curious, but within that household, slowly, surely, steadily, as relentlessly as the progress of a Greek drama, unspoken plans for the destiny of Adeline Stendhal began to shape themselves in the mind of Martha Crandall and her husband Deeping Johnson.

This catastrophe that had come to them was to be borne. This frail, blond, volatile, young outsider, with the stage-like name of Jacques Stendhal, music teacher, was not to be endured within the substantial walls of the Crandall mansion.

And it must be admitted, that as time marched on, Jacques himself gave justification to their enormous resentments against him. He twaddled away his days. After his marriage, his slight income from the teaching of piano, fell off entirely. It was nothing for him to spend hours on end in the narrow strip of garden behind the Crandall house, dandling his baby girl on his knees.

In vain Adeline, as if she sensed the menace that was forming between them, pleaded with him to stabilize his life; to either resume his own profession of piano instruction, or adapt himself to some form of work in her father's vast cotton organizations.

It was no use. To all intents and purposes, Adeline had married a ne'er-do-well. When the baby was three years old, a phantom of delight if ever there was one, affairs in that household began to shape themselves toward a climax. For thirty months Jacques Stendhal had not turned his hand in an earning capacity, the threats, the aspersions, the abhorrence of his parents-in-law notwithstanding.

For thirty months, until her sweet eyes were rimmed with weeping, Adeline had implored, begged, coaxed. And to what end? To the end that after these importunings, Jacques, remorseful for the moment, would promise, and the scene would end in one of play; the young father, the young mother, their child between them romping in their youth and vitality through the somber rooms of the somber mansion.

It was at the end of the fourth year, however, that the older Crandalls did succeed in creating a schism. It was finally borne in upon even Adeline herself that life with this play boy was unendurable; it was not only unfair to herself and to her parents, but to the youngster at their knees, to continue as his wife.

Just why it was unfair, Adeline never stopped to ask herself, except, that according to all the traditions of the Crandalls and the Johnsons, every man must produce. It never occurred to Adeline that the fact that the Crandall-Johnsons had seven millions should be more than sufficient to offset the congenial shortcomings of Jacques.

When the little girl was four years to the day, Adeline consented to the divorce. Custom, but the reality of the situation never seemed to come home to Jacques. He could not take seriously the fact that this sweet girl of his life and heart was about to walk out of them. And yet she did.

One year after Adeline's incredible acquiescence to a divorce Jacques found himself back in his humble studio as piano teacher, pounding out his living at the keyboard.

The situation in the Crandall-Johnson house had progressed. With an acquiescence which seemed to denote that the strength for conflict had flowed out of her heart, Adeline resumed life according to the dictates of her parents. Not even the prospect of their designs for an approaching marriage with Donald Dugan seemed to penetrate the icy stolidity that had encased her since her official separation from Jacques Stendhal.

Life resumed its even flow. She had her child, a small beauty, who was permitted by court agreement, to visit her father once every month, and Donald Dugan as eager as ever to marry her was reconciled to taking the little step-daughter along with his marriage contract to Adeline.

Two nights before the wedding Adeline, still in what seemed to be her icy mantle of reserve, walked out of the Crandall-Johnson household with her child in her arms. At ten o'clock that same night she eloped with Jacques Stendhal and was remarried to him in the office of a local magistrate.

The Stendhals, there are five of them by now, are a playful, unstable, hilarious group. There are a pair of solemn brown doors that remain closed against them. The Stendhals, both Jacques and Adeline, try to feel solemn about that. Somehow they cannot.

Severe Self-Discipline in Fourteenth Century

Early in the Fourteenth century there arose a curious sect in southern Europe whose distinguishing tenet it was that the human body should be made to suffer, in order that the soul might be saved. Forming themselves into bands, they marched through the lands singing hymns and flogging themselves and others with whips and thongs. Flagellants they called themselves, and absurd though their actions would appear to be in our day, then it was recognized that such notable protests against self-indulgence and sinful luxury were not without value. One of the favorite hymns of the Flagellants was one reciting the sorrows of Mary the Blessed Virgin as she stood by the cross of Jesus, and begging her in its latter part to minister grace to the sinners.

The use of the rosary and been brought from the Far East in the previous century by a Dominican monk, and introduced into Christianity with special prayers to the Virgin Mary, or "Ave Marias" mingled with recitations of the Lord's Prayer, to be memorized by the bands, and repeated. It was the age when such observances were just making their way into the faith of many Christians. Naturally the hymn on Mary at the Cross, "Stabat Mater Dolosa," as it was called, suited the fashion of the age, and was introduced into the service books in 1414, whence its use spread over the whole Roman Catholic church.

A Few Little Smiles

DUBIOUS RECOMMENDATION

While in Switzerland a traveler was about to make an ascent, when he thought he might as well institute some inquiries about the guide who was to accompany him. "Is he a thoroughly skilled climber?" he asked his hotelkeeper. "I should say so," was the reply. "He has lost two parties of tourists down the mountainside, and each time has come off without as much as a scratch himself."

Would Take a Train

An Englishwoman walked into the ticket office at Chicago and asked for a ticket to New York. "Do you want to go by Buffalo?" asked the clerk. "Certainly not," said the Englishwoman. "By train."

DEPENDS ON TACKLER

"When a player kicks the ball over that pole, does it mean he is out?" "That depends upon how hard his opponent hits him just before he made the goal."

Theory
A theory too often shrinks its purpose as it stops; It's truly splendid when it works, But awful when it flops.

A Regular Devil
A bashful youth had been presented to a flapper and for ten minutes he sat speechless, growing redder and more embarrassed. At length the girl said, sweetly, "And now let us talk of something else!"—Hummel, Hamburg.

Not in the Budget
Irate Papa—What! You want to marry my daughter—why, you don't make enough to pay the rent! Dumbissimo—Well, Eloise and I hadn't expected you to charge us any rent.

WHAT MISSILE?
Mrs. Joax—Here's an account of a mysterious disappearance. A woman misses her husband. Mr. Joax—What did she throw at him?

Apparently Placid Stream
The river flowing on its way Now bids our cares redouble. The waterp'wr it may display Can cause all kinds of trouble.

Learned Better
Marmon—Does your wife still sharpen pencils with your razor? Smythe—No, she's learned better since she started shaving her own eye brows.

Needed Help!
"Heavens!" exclaimed the preacher, "what's the idea of that stream of profanity!" "Well," replied the tough little caddy, "after a shot like that awful one you just made somebody had to cuss, and I know you didn't dare to do it yourself."

Correction
"Pop, hey, Pop!" "Don't talk that way, Oswald, I'm in the grocery business, not a fountain clerk."

Had Reasoned It Out
"What makes you think she doesn't like you?" "She told me she thought there was a fool in every family." "Well, what of that?" "I had told her a moment before that I was an only child."

Oked With Her
Miss Pitt—How'd you like to take a nice long walk in the park? Catter (enthusiastically)—Oh, fine! M. P.—Then don't let me hold you back.

Loading It!
Marjorie—You'd better not call any more, Jimmy. I'm afraid something is going to happen! Jimmy—What? Marjorie—Oh, nothing. Only I saw papa putting lead in his wooden leg last night.

Very Likely
Crandall—Have you heard about Grimes? He was arrested today on the golf links. Greenbank—For driving while intoxicated, I suppose.

BOWELS

Let Dr. Caldwell help whenever your child is feverish or upset; or has caught cold. His simple prescription will make that bilious, headachy, cross boy or girl comfortable, happy, well in just a few hours. It soon restores the bowels to healthy regularity. It helps "break-up" a cold by keeping the bowels free from all that sickening mucus waste.

You have a famous doctor's word for this laxative. Dr. Caldwell's record of having attended over 3500 births without loss of one mother or baby is believed unique in American medical history.

Get a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin from your drugstore and have it ready. Then you won't have to worry when any member of your family is headachy, bilious, gassy or constipated. Syrup Pepsin is good for all ages. It sweetens the bowels; increases appetite—makes digestion more complete.

IS IT YOUR NERVES?

St. Paul, Minn.—"I was in a run-down state of health, my nerves were so weak and upset I could not sleep. I was not in shape to do anything that required strength. But, by the time I had taken two bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription I was feeling like a new woman, my nerves were strengthened so I could sleep and get my rest and I was built up generally to normal health."—Mrs. T. G. Gifford, 555 Canada St., Buffalo, N. Y.

All Wet
"How do you like my new bathrobe?" the young lady of the house asked the new hired girl. "My goodness, Miss Gracie, you ain't a-goin' to get that purty thing all wet, be ye?"

First "American President"
Martin Van Buren was the first of the Presidents of the United States born under the American flag; he and Theodore Roosevelt are the only Presidents not of English extraction, both being of Dutch ancestry.

That is why so many women in this community turn first to the page in this newspaper which contains the illustrated fashion articles by Miss Cherie Nicholas. For Miss Nicholas is an authority on fashions—not the freak models and the extreme styles, but the modern woman demands, those which are up to the minute and at the same time economical and practical.

Be sure to look for these articles in each issue of this newspaper and then tell your women friends about them. They will be glad to know how they can wear clothes which carry the message of the well-dressed woman.

What's Your Favorite Sport?

Highest Paid Short Fiction Writer
FANNIE HURST is the highest paid short story writer in the world today. There's a good reason for that. She knows human nature and under the magic of her touch, the people about whom she writes become real people, not mere literary creations. The plots of her stories are based on incidents from real life as it is lived every day by the common people.

Such are the stories which are appearing in this newspaper. Be sure to read them and talk to your friends about them, for they like interesting stories, too. And Fannie Hurst's stories are interesting stories.

The Pastor Says:
He who burns with hatred lets his enemy heap coals of fire on his head. A man does not truly love his wife until he loves the bill for her Pastor's union, neither does he love the church until he loves her budget.—John Andrew Holmes.

Tallest President?
George Washington was the tallest man who has ever been President of the United States. He was six feet three inches in height. No other President has ever been able to measure up to him, although Lincoln was only one inch short of the mark.

With a McCormick-Deering Two-Row Cultivator

... one man can do two men's work

YES, you can cultivate twice as large an acreage with the McCormick-Deering UD Two-Row Cultivator; but that is not the most important factor. What is more important to you is that you can use this two-row cultivator on your present acreage, and do a good job of cultivating in half the time.

Remember that, at twice the speed, if the season is rainy, you can get twice as much cultivating done between rains. And if you hire help, the two-row makes a clean-cut saving of 50% in the cost of cultivating.

WE can supply this Two-Row with the beam and shovel equipment you require. Visit us next time you are in town.

This Year Centennial of Installment Buying

Installment buying was inaugurated 100 years ago by savings and loan companies, which this year observe the centennial of their founding. Installment buying, originated to permit people of small means to buy and pay for a home through installments while enjoying the home, has since spread to the distribution of commodities and luxuries.

companies were organized in Ohio in 1867, by returned Civil War soldiers anxious to set up in peace time activities and provide homes for their families, it is still a matter of controversy whether the first savings and loan company was organized in Delaware, Cleveland or Cincinnati, but it is certain that a group of such institutions was organized in 1867.

Vehicle at Home Either on the Rails or Road

The latest thing in railway vehicles is a coach that can run either on rails or on roads. "The Ro-Railer," built at Eudersfield, was recently tested. The road-rail coach looks at first sight very much like any other you may see on the highways of today. But a closer inspection shows that it has two sets of wheels, one with large pneumatic tires and the other with flanges to fit the rails. The new vehicle will save people the trouble of walking between their homes and the railway station: In the morning it will call at the house of those who book seats in it. Then, having picked up its load of passengers, it will make its way to a special kind of launching place near the station. Here it will drive straight on the rails, continuing its journey without a pause. In the evening the process will be reversed.

If ignorance is bliss there should be more happiness in the world.

The SEALED TRUNK

By Henry Kitchell Webster

THE STORY

At a public dance Martin Forbes, a newspaper man, cuts in on Rhoda White's dance with Max Lewis, whom Martin instinctively dislikes. He overhears a conversation between Lewis and a woman, which he realizes concerns Rhoda. He recalls a "blind ad" inquiring the whereabouts of "Rhoda McFarland" and senses a newspaper story.

Later, but not until an hour or two later, going over the evening on foot, as it were, he was able to surmise that his complacency over the apparent success of this maneuver, getting rid of both Lewis and Babe with a single well-placed introduction, might have had something to do with his discomfort in the scene which followed with Rhoda. She, of course, couldn't have known how much deeper he'd planned into her affairs while she'd been finishing out the dance with the negligible Elizabeth. And it wasn't surprising if she'd felt when he came up and took her arm, detaching her from her most recent partner with barely a word, that his manner was assuming a good deal too much, as if their friendship had been a matter of months rather than of minutes. He'd been entirely unconscious of this manner at the time. All he'd been thinking of was the importance of what he had to tell her and of what she in return would have to tell him.

He was aware that she looked at him a little oddly as he started to lead her away, and he explained his action, adequately he felt by saying, "We've got to find some place where we can talk. Shant we get out of this? I'll take you home if you like." At that she got rid of his hand rather brusquely and turned to stare at him, still half perplexed but in rapidly mounting exasperation. "I don't want to get out of this," she said. "I came here to dance." Before he could speak, she added, more amiably, "We can talk now, though, can't we? And look, there's a place we can sit." The sofa she darted off to take possession of occupied perhaps the most public place in that entire public dance hall, opposite the head of one of the flights of the grand staircase. "That is all right, isn't it?" she asked.

"I suppose so," he agreed discontentedly. "At least it's got its back to the wall and no one can hear what we say without standing right in front of us and listening."

"But what have we got to say," she demanded, "that anybody shouldn't hear?"

"Plenty," he told her. "Of course I don't know how serious it is. You'll know better than I. It sounded to me like something you ought to be told about."

"Sounded? Do you mean you heard people talking about me?"

"I think they were talking about you. I'm practically sure they were."

His chain of inferences had been straight enough once, but it was tangled now. "I'll start with something else," he said, after a moment's silence. "Do you remember asking me why I looked funny when you told me your name was Rhoda, and my saying I had an association with the name that I couldn't spot? Well, I have spotted it now. For the last week there's been an advertisement in the personal column of the News for the address of Rhoda McFarland. The reason I'd noticed it was that it was always a blind ad; the advertiser, I mean, never giving his own name."

He had instinctively avoided looking at her while he was speaking, but the quality of the silence after he'd finished drew his eyes around to her face. He saw it deeply flushed.

"Well," she asked as she encountered his gaze, a sharpness that sounded like panic and in her voice, "what has that got to do with me?"

"He wanted to say, 'You are Rhoda McFarland, aren't you?' but his nerve failed him. He didn't try to answer her question."

"Was it Rhoda McFarland you heard then talking about?" she asked at the end of another silence, her voice now in better control, "and did you think there couldn't be more than one person named Rhoda?"

At last his mind was on the rails again. "I didn't hear any name mentioned at all. I'll tell you what I did hear. The man said, 'She's the girl, all right.' The woman asked him how he knew. He said the girl was a cagey little brat—meaning, I suppose, that she hadn't told him as much about herself as he'd tried to find out—but that he had got her first name. That name, apparently, clinched it, since the woman had already half recognized your face—the girl's face, I mean."

She noted the slip and pounced upon it angrily. "Why do you keep talking about me? What makes you think it has anything to do with me?"

"I heard the woman call him Max," he went on doggedly. "He was Max Lewis, all right. I got a look at him later. I don't know who the woman was. I didn't even see her properly. It came out in their talk that she'd been going by on the sidewalk just as—just as this girl they were looking for turned in. The woman thought she recognized her, got hold of Lewis somehow, and had him come to the dance just to scrape an acquaintance with you. I can't help it. I do think it was you they meant. I knew he told you his first name, but I didn't know until then that you'd told him yours."

"I didn't," she instantly put in, with the emphasis, he thought, of sudden relief. "The only person I told my name tonight was you. He might have heard me tell you, though," she added. "I saw him crossing the floor right near us while we were talking about it."

For a moment he thought she'd given in and admitted she was Rhoda McFarland. He moved his hand to cover hers as he said, "Then it's my fault really that he found out, and that makes me the natural person to help you."

He thought it wasn't his touch she meant that. Apparently the question was a relief to her, for she added, "Can't you see now it's all nonsense?"

"Sit still another minute anyhow and listen to the rest of it. Then perhaps you won't think it's nonsense."

"It was the woman who seemed most excited about you. She told Max it was his job to find out where you lived, tonight. She said it didn't matter whether he took you home or followed you home. She said that as soon as they knew that, they'd have C. J.—whoever he is—where they wanted him. She said there wasn't any time to waste because you might see that ad in the paper any day and answer it."

She'd snatched her hand away long before he'd finished speaking. Now, in furious exasperation, she cried, "—I? Why do you keep talking about me? Why should I answer an advertisement for Rhoda McFarland? I won't. I'll tell you that much, anyhow. And I won't let Max Lewis take me home, either, if that's any satisfaction to you."

"How will you keep him from following you home?"

He saw she flinched at that, and added, "Let me go with you now. We can give them the slip. Why not? Why won't you?"

"Because it's all nonsense," she said weakly. "Because I want to stay and dance."

"I'll tell you what I'll do," he said. "If you won't let me take you home, I'll follow you myself and see that he doesn't."

She was angrier than he now, and apparently colder. "Why are you so anxious to find out where I live?" she asked. "Because you think I'm Rhoda McFarland? And there must be a story about me if I advertised for—and you want to get it for the paper? Is that the way reporters do?"

It didn't occur to him until quite a bit later to wonder how she knew he was a reporter. For the moment he was just sat and stared at her, stupefied at the gross injustice she had done him. Before he could get himself together to controvert the monstrous charge, he perceived the harmless, unnecessary Higgins standing before them.

Rhoda saw him too and sprang to her feet. "Do you want me to dance this one with you?" she asked him. "I'd love to."

Martin, boiling away inside like a teakettle, followed them as far as the edge of the dance floor and stood there a while making up his mind what he should do next. Not really that, perhaps, he conceded afterward, so much as fanning his perfectly righteous indignation and rather enjoying it.

Presently, though, his reflections ceased to be even dubiously enjoyable. A chill misgiving blew over him that Rhoda might be right after all. Lewis, he noted, was dancing with Babe Jennings with a contented absorption inexplicable under the hypothesis that his only interest tonight lay in talking or following another girl home. When Martin perceived this, he turned away disgustedly and went home himself.

CHAPTER II

Why She Changed Her Name

Rhoda tried to tell herself she was glad she had snubbed Martin Forbes. She enjoyed, after a fashion, the consciousness of his glaring at her from the edge of the dance floor, but when she perceived that he was no longer there and came to the conclusion that he'd really abandoned her, she found rather suddenly that she was tired of the Alhambra for tonight and wanted to go home. And although she maintained that Martin's suspicions of Max Lewis were wild nonsense, she was rather glad that Leander Higgins offered to take her home.

Their trip, mostly by trolley car, was entirely without incident. Of course it would be! Martin had made up the whole thing out of his own head. She was as friendly as she knew how to be to Leander all the way to the studio door but at that point she said good night to him firmly. It had been only by the exercising of a good deal of resolution that she'd kept her mind on him up to that point. And until Babe came home she wanted to be let alone.

As she glanced around the studio after shutting the door on Leander Higgins her eye fell on tonight's News scattered about the floor, as her roommate had left it. Was that advertisement really in the paper, or had Martin Forbes made that up, too? No, there it was in the personal column, just as he'd said. "Rhoda McFarland will learn something to her advantage . . ." She dropped in to Babe's chair and the section of the paper slid from a slack hand back to the floor.

It had given her a surprising shock to see her discarded name in print like that. It brought things back that she'd thought she was done with for ever; some things that she hadn't thought about in years.

Their yard at home, with the venerable live oak in the middle of it, in whose branches she and her three inseparable friends used to scramble about like young monkeys; the three A's they used to call them because their names all began that way—Ann, and Alice, and Amy. They were all in the same grade; seventh it was, when her father told her one morning that she wasn't to go to school any more for the present. For the present! She'd never gone to school again; not since that day. And Amy and Alice and Ann faded out of the picture. They didn't come to play in her yard any more.

And she had understood that it was because of something that was spoken of, when it was mentioned at all, as the trial; her father's trial—Prof. Walter Whitehouse McFarland. She'd had Mum act that this was the kind of trial her father had had.

Her father, of course, hadn't been sent to prison. He had "got off." But why, if he hadn't done the horrible thing, hadn't he gone back to the college and she to school and Ann and Alice and Amy come to play with her again? Probably because people had thought he'd done it, anyhow.

Their departure from the little university town out in California had felt like running away to her and, she was sure, to her father, also. There was one incident about the journey which she remembered very clearly. Her father's voice had flagged and she'd looked up to see if he'd fallen asleep. He wasn't asleep, but starting out over the desert with such a look of pain in his face that she burst into tears.

At the time she'd had no idea what he'd meant by that. But the events of the later years of his life made it clear enough. He'd had a scheme of some sort, now that he wasn't a college professor any more, for making her rich. A scheme that he'd never brought off, to be sure, but one that down to the very night of his death he'd never lost hope about.

As it had worked out, it was that hope of his, always on the point of coming true, that had been the cause of most of her unhappiness during the four long years they had lived in that Chicago hotel. She didn't know that she regretted them now. That made a pretty hard sort of problem to work out. Most people, certainly, would say it was a horrible way for a child to be brought up.

The hotel itself was all right, one of the less pretentious ones of the new residential type. Their two rooms up on the tenth floor, furnished in imitation black walnut and taupe upholstery, especially perhaps the floor lamp with its heavy silk shade, had carried out the idea that they'd come to live in a palace. The kitchenette, with its electric stove, had seemed a marvelous toy to her; and their white tile bathroom, with its modern plumbing and its never failing abundance of hot water, had been a luxury.

She'd taken it for granted, during those first few days while breathless she explored the wonders of the hotel, that the wealth her father had hinted at was already in his pockets. It wasn't until he expressed concern over her loneliness—it was beginning to strike in a little—that she asked him why, now that he was rich, he had to work so hard and couldn't take a little time off to play with her.

He'd smiled and told her he was not rich yet, not rich at all, but that he thought it wasn't going to be long, not more than a few months at most, before he was. As soon as that happened he'd stop work and they'd go roaming the world together. Meanwhile she was to be patient and get along as best she could.

How many times during the next four years had they had that same talk, without essential variation? Dozens—scores! Toward the end, the note of it had got sharper, more like a cry of desperation, until her one care, with him, had come to be to avoid everything that could remind him of the life she led during the long days from the time he left her at the breakfast table until he came back sometimes long after dinner at night.

She didn't wonder now, looking back upon it, that as the months stretched into years the thought of the little girl left unoccupied and uncared for should have driven him frantic. And yet, somehow, it hadn't been horrible at all.

If she'd been a timid child, of course it would have been dreadful. Or if people hadn't naturally liked her and wanted to be kind to her. Or if her father had been the sort who asked nagging questions and told her she must never do that again. She'd begun doing things from the first day he'd left her there in the hotel that he probably wouldn't have approved if he'd known about. Most of the things she'd done had been sensible enough, she thought—and where she hadn't been sensible she must have been lucky, for she'd never got into any serious trouble.

One thing that went a long way toward making her situation tolerable during those four years was the fact that she'd always had as much money as she needed. From somewhere her father had had a perfectly adequate and regular supply. From her fourteenth birthday on, she'd known exactly how much it was: a hundred dollars a week. At that time he'd begun handing it all over to her except what his small personal wants required, and had given her the job of keeping their accounts and paying their hotel bills. It had always been in cash—five yellow-backed twenties. There'd never been any sign of a change for better or for worse in their circumstances.

She never knew where the money came from. Once she asked him outright, and he had so pointedly ignored the question that she never asked it again. She was afraid she'd guessed.

She was afraid it was her Uncle William—the ogre. Her whole capacity for fear was concentrated, focused upon that one point. She believed that it was he from whom she and her father had fled, thereby frustrating his intention to take her away

He'd hoped he would tell her what the trial had been about. He had never, even in after years, told her that. Only once, that she knew of, had his spirit flashed up.

This had happened when her Uncle William—her must have been her dead mother's brother; he couldn't have been her father's—had come to see them, after the trial and before they started east. She couldn't remember ever having seen him before, but she did remember the falsely genial smile with which he had reproached her for having forgotten him.

He'd been an ogre to her ever since. Her father had not been afraid of him. He'd sent her from the room on Uncle William's saying that her father could probably guess what he'd come to see him about. She'd obediently gone, but only as far as her bedroom, and the boom of the ogre's voice had come through the thin walls all too clearly. He'd come to try to make her father give her away, for ever, to "the child"! But her father, though quiet and conciliatory at first, had finally defied her uncle and told him to go straight to h—!

She'd never heard him swear before or since and she had thought that the reason of his asking her, after her uncle had gone, whether she had heard any of their talk. Anyhow, it had been why she told him she had not.

She hadn't understood much of it at the time, beyond her uncle's assertion that her father had disgraced himself and wasn't a fit person to bring up a child. She must, though, have stored up a good many uncomprehended phrases of that talk, or how could she have been so sure, two or three years later, when she read in the newspaper of a sensational prosecution of another professor under the same act that this was the kind of trial her father had had.

Her father, of course, hadn't been sent to prison. He had "got off." But why, if he hadn't done the horrible thing, hadn't he gone back to the college and she to school and Ann and Alice and Amy come to play with her again? Probably because people had thought he'd done it, anyhow.

Their departure from the little university town out in California had felt like running away to her and, she was sure, to her father, also. There was one incident about the journey which she remembered very clearly. Her father's voice had flagged and she'd looked up to see if he'd fallen asleep. He wasn't asleep, but starting out over the desert with such a look of pain in his face that she burst into tears.

As it had worked out, it was that hope of his, always on the point of coming true, that had been the cause of most of her unhappiness during the four long years they had lived in that Chicago hotel. She didn't know that she regretted them now. That made a pretty hard sort of problem to work out. Most people, certainly, would say it was a horrible way for a child to be brought up.

The hotel itself was all right, one of the less pretentious ones of the new residential type. Their two rooms up on the tenth floor, furnished in imitation black walnut and taupe upholstery, especially perhaps the floor lamp with its heavy silk shade, had carried out the idea that they'd come to live in a palace. The kitchenette, with its electric stove, had seemed a marvelous toy to her; and their white tile bathroom, with its modern plumbing and its never failing abundance of hot water, had been a luxury.

BETTY, YOU WERE RIGHT! MY WASH LOOKS WHITE AS SNOW TODAY, AND I DIDN'T SCRUB OR BOIL

Thanks her friend for secret of easy washdays...

I WAS hurt when Betty called me old-fashioned for using a washboard. But now I'm so grateful to her for telling me about Rinso! It saves me so much work on wash-day. I don't scrub or boil any more. . . . Yet I get whiter, brighter clothes than ever! Now I wouldn't think of using any soap but Rinso!

Keeps colors bright

In Rinso's thick, creamy suds dirt loosens—soaks out. No scrubbing. That saves the clothes—saves mending—keeps colors bright and new-looking.

Even in hardest water, Rinso gives twice as much suds, cup for cup, as lightweight, puffed-up soaps. Rinso's lasting suds. Wonderful in washing machines too; the makers of 40 famous washers recommend Rinso.

Try Rinso for dish-washing! It's like magic! Get the BIG box.

Combination Boat and Tent

So light and compact that it can easily be carried on the back when folded, a sporting outfit in the form of a rubber boat and tent is finding favor in Germany, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. The inflated rubber craft supports a large weight on the water, and when beached at night, has a cover which transforms it into a cozy tent for campers. It is prepared for the water or for carrying in a few minutes.

NASH

Of course... you can get along without Twin Ignition ... but you don't get along so well

You could, if necessary, see with one eye. You can drive with one hand. Two make a better job of it.

The same applies to Twin Ignition. People who drive the Nash Twin Ignition Eight-80 or Eight-90 (16 spark plugs, 16 firing points, instead of 8) have a distinct advantage over cars still using single ignition. The gasoline mixture is burned more quickly and more completely.

By engineering test, the same motor with Twin Ignition instead of single ignition, produces 22% more power, 5 more miles per hour top speed and 2 extra miles of travel from a gallon of gasoline.

Of course, you can get along without Twin Ignition. But we say, and these cars will prove it, that you don't get along so well!

Just compare the pep, power, smoothness and gasoline consumption of the Nash Eight-80 or Eight-90 with cars of the single ignition type at the same price, and you'll agree with us and with Nash owners, that here is a most desirable improvement.

Buy no car today until you have made this interesting comparison. We will gladly arrange a demonstration. Just phone... we'll send a car.

HONORING A PIONEER ADVERTISER

It is generally agreed that one of the foundations of modern business is advertising. 1930, a year long to be remembered for many things not so pleasant, was a splendid year to test out the value of advertising efficiency in modern business.

The American Tobacco Company, William Wrigley, Jr., Company, and many others whose names are prominently before the public, came through 1930 with the largest earnings in their history, and the heads of institutions like these do not hesitate to credit advertising with its share of the glory. The head of one of these large companies said that the great success obtained by his company had been made possible through the recognition of the value of newspaper advertising.

Most of us, not being fully informed on the subject, are apt to consider advertising a strictly modern weapon of business advancement. In this connection it is interesting to note that Cyrus Hall McCormick, whose invention of the reaper one hundred years ago is being celebrated throughout the world this year, was a great believer in advertising and a consistent user of advertising space. His first advertisement of the reaper appeared in 1833 in the Lexington Union. From time to time he continued to publish notices of his reaper and also of his patented hillside plow. By 1845 he was publishing long advertisements in the farm papers of Chicago, Detroit, Columbus and northern New York.

These reaper advertisements of long ago hardly meet the advertising standards of today. Yet, in the last analysis, they contain the essentials and in the highest type of modern advertisement, arranged in the quaint style of the period. There is an illustration of the reaper drawn by a team of sleek horses, moving along at an easy trot; a man in a high hat is raking the platform clear. The text of the advertisement speaks of the good crops that are coming, of a labor shortage, and admonishes the farmers to place their orders early, before the supply is exhausted. Then appears a testimonial, sometimes a round-robin affair, signed by farmers throughout Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin.

What is there of basic importance in the present-day advertisement that did not appear in McCormick's reaper advertisements of almost a century ago? The machine is pictured to you at its best. The illustration would have you believe that it is child's play, and pleasant play at that, to operate the reaper and rake the platform. The prediction of good crops to come is a prediction of prosperity, creating the same urge that makes us want to buy radios and automobiles today. The description of his reaper compels us to think that it is the last word in efficient design. And the testimonial is a forerunner of the testimonial of the society matron who now urges us to buy this bed or that tooth paste or perfume.

McCormick, almost a century ago, brought the force of advertising to his aid in building up the farm equipment industry. He believed in advertising. He was a prolific contributor to newspapers and magazines, always writing challenging and pointing out why his reaper was the best and why it should be used.

WISCONSIN CATTLE SHIPMENTS IN APRIL

Wisconsin shipments of dairy cattle to other states and countries during April of this year were 227 head above March, but about 30 per cent below April a year ago. The total exports for the month were 3,781 head as compared with 3,554 in March, and 5,050 in April of 1930, according to the crop reporting division of the Wisconsin and United States departments of agriculture at Madison.

The furnishing of good cattle for breeding and dairy purposes to other states and countries has been an important business in Wisconsin agriculture. During the ten years ending with 1930 a total of 607,940 head were exported from the state in this way, or an average of over sixty thousand head annually. The high point in shipments was reached in 1927 when over 83,000 head were shipped.

Since 1927 the number exported has declined somewhat, a rather low point of 56,466 head being reached in 1930. For the four months of the present year the exports have amounted to 12,555 head as compared with 13,003 for the first four months of 1930, a decrease of a little over three per cent. This is undoubtedly due in a large part to the general depression which has affected all commodities.

Prices of Wisconsin dairy cattle have remained constant during the past three months, according to reports received from crop correspondents. While cattle prices have been declining for over a year, they apparently reached a low point in February of this year. An average price of $63 per head is reported as having been received by Wisconsin dairymen for each of the past three months, as compared with $66 per head in January, 1931, and $89 a year ago.
