The speaker of the day was John Cannon of West Bend, District Attorney of Washington County, Mr. Cannon is a young man without much experience in public speaking, but his address placed him among the best speakers that have appeared in Kewaskum. He departed considerably from the usual type of Memorial addresses and for that reason he made an excellent impression on all who had the good fortune to lear him. He said, "The day was especially designed to build into the souls of the children of our schools an appreciation of the sacrifices made in their behalf down the ages." In interpreting the cause of our greatness, he continued, "That we are great today not because family and other relatives and we have an illustrious ancestry, not because we came from royal kings, ded the graduating exercises of the but because in America the chains were taken from the aims and shackles from the brain, where fear was dissipated, giving every brain, every arm, and every limb, liberty to move." The speaker continued by stating that every era of storm and distress in our country found men ready to meet the situation, that the first thought in our hearts today must go to those men in blue who were willing and ready to sacrifice their lives that this country may be one. Mr. Carnon indicated that the heritages we now have were won at a high price, and that inasmuch as we have received much our responsibility to generations that are to come is very great. He recommended to his hearers and to the soldiers that there must be developed in all of our leaders the same traits that charterized the commander of the Grand Army of the Republic during the Civil War, that outstanding American president, Abraham Lincoln, who, somehow, somewhere, learned to think straight and through his straight thinking formulated sound judgement and then possessed the courage to have his jugements executed. This was the challenge he threw down to leaders, whether soldiers, or teachers. or industrial captains to bring the best they had unselfishly to that one outstanding trait of good citizenship to pass on to the next generation a brought to a close with the graduation Salutatory-Aviation George Koerble Presentation of diplomas...... Team Standings Kewaskum 1 Campbellsport 2 2 500 Eden 3 250

Osceola 0 4 000 In a very hotly and interestingly contested game, the Kewaskum base ball team defeated Campbellsport by a score of 5 to 1, on the local diamond last Sunday afternoon The game from the start was a pitcher's battle in which Jones, who did the twirling for the locals, struck out 12 men and allowed eight scattered hits. His pitching was superb and deserves much credit, a number of times pitching himself out of a tight hole with the bases loaded and no one out. He pitched a shutout game, and only for two errors in the fifth inning, would have been credited with one. Felix for Compbellsport, did fine, he struck out six men and allowed six hits. Up to the fifth inning both sides were held scoreless.

A summary of the game is as follows:

The Duncan bill overhauling the regulatory powers of the state railroad commission leaped the last legislative barrier when it found unanimous approval in the assembly. Amendments to the bill limit to a degree the proposed regulation of the commission over holding companies and permits directors of Wisconsin utility corporations to be residents of other states. The mensure gives the public service commission, as it will be called, jurisdiction over arrangements or contracts between Wisconsin utilities and outside holding companies and authorizes the commission to require that the arrangements be filed and open to public opinion. Changes are also made in the regulation of public utility securities.

Instruction in co-operative marketing would be included in the curriculums of elementary and secondary publie schools if a bill rushed to passage in the assembly becomes a law. The Don Smith bill, carrying the co-operative movement into the school room, also stresses the food and health value of dairy products.

One lone voice was raised in a vote to support a tax on Wisconsin's home brewing industry in the assembly while a thunderous chorus voted down a bill to tax wort 25 cents a pound and malt Evrup 5 cents a pound. There was no debate and the solltary supporter remained anonymous.

The Keppel bill, which requires automobile certificates of registration to be placed in sealed metal containers and attached to dashboards of all cars was passed, 18 to 12, by the senate. Another measure declaring this bill effective only if the secretary of state could secure containers at not exceeding 20 cents each was tabled, pending assembly action on the Keppel bill. It was pointed out that the cost of such holders to automobile owners at the 20 cent figure would amount to more than $160,000, according to 1980 registra-

Gov. La Follette has signed a bill prohibiting the transportation of fresh fruit and vegetables without a license and setting up rules on the handling, loading and shipping of such produce. He also approved a bill making resale of forestry stock supplied by the conservation commission for reforestation purposes a misdemeanor with a penalty of from $50 to $200 fine.

The senate wrote "finis" to two tax bills when it killed the Hitt dividend tax measure and a bill to repeal the reciprocity feature of the inheritance Tax law.

Similar measures on both subjects had previously been thrown into the heap of rejected bills. The Hitt bill was similar to the Rush dividend tax bill, which was defeated by two votes in the senate after prolonged debate. Disposal of the Rush bill presaged defeat for the Hitt bill.

The bill on the inheritance tax law was introduced in the assembly by the committee on taxation. Under its provisions, the law would be repealed so as to eliminate that portion by which Wisconsin agrees not to tax the estate of nonresident deceased persons, if the state in which the person lived extends the same rights to Wisconsin residents. The bill was defeated, 18 to 12.

The Roethe bill for a state board of education, to have jurisdiction of virtually every educational institution of Wisconsin, was passed by the senate, 15 to 12. It now goes to the assembly, where it is expected to meet with difficulties.

The board would have under its jurisdiction the state university, all teachers colleges and several special schools, such as Stout institute and the Pietteville school of mines as well as the graded and high schools of the state.

The sengte Effled, 16 to 13, the Keppel bill which would have made all persons between 21 and 60 pay a minimum income tar of $5. Inmates of Wisconsin's penal Institutions will be given educational training if a bill passed by the assembly becomes law. The measure provides that the state board of control establish, by July 1, an educational system in all state penal institutions. Courses to be pursued would be optional with the inminutes, it states.

Solution of Problem Not Yet Pointed Out.

· Chicago. — Unless unprecedented droughts or other disasters smite vast fields of wheat now sprouting, dealers on the board of trade see a world's carryover at the end of the present "wheat year" June 30 of approximately 600,000,000 bushels.

That is almost 100,000,000 bushels more than last year's surplus and an excess over world needs of 350,000,000 bushels.

The experts of the board of trade say the present supply and demand situntion does not promise to right itself until 1933 or 1934-and then only if the different world governments maintain a hands-off policy.

U. S. WANTS CHINA TO TAKE UP LOANS

American Money Borrowed by Peiping Government.

Shanghal. - Nelson T. Johnson, American minister to China, left for Nanking, where he will ask the Chinese government to take steps to refund two defaulted American loans which were made by the defunct Peiping government about ten years ago. The loans total about $12,000,-000. One of them, for $5,500,000, was made by the Continental and Commercial National bank of Chicago.

These loans originally were defaulted at the time of the Washington arms conference, and no principal or interest has since been paid. Foreign Ministe C. T. Wang has promised to give the matter his consideration, but the Chinese press claims certain elements of the Kuomintang object to a refund on the ground that the old Pelping government used the money to prosecute the war against Canton.

Unemployed Workers in Germany Stage Riots Berlin.-Serious rioting by unemployed has taken place in many towns of central Germany and in the Ruhr the would be doomed to pitch out his | and then stood by him through it all, entire career without ever once participating in a world series. In this connection let me relate a little anecdote about Johnson. It is illuminative of the man's character.

Just before the start of the 1924 world series-it was shortly before the opening game in Washington-I went Into the Washington dressing room with a dozen or so balls that I wanted Walter to autograph. Johnson, just about to pitch his first world series game, was visibly nervous for the first time in his career. The fans were expecting too much and Walter was really worried. He was carrying a tremendous load on his shoulders. His band, as he autographed the balls, shook. His signature was scrawly, where it usually was firm and clear.

And then Johnson went out and pitched his heart out, only to lose in twelve closely-fought innings to Mc-Graw's Giants. And then he started again—and again he lost.

The day of the last game in Wash-Angton I again strolled into the Washington dressing room shortly before game time, with some more balls to be autographed. No one was in sight. Then, over at the far end of the room I saw Johnson. He was sitting on a trunk, his knees drawn up to his chin. He was gazing into space. He didn't see me.

"Helio, Walter." "Hello, Billy, how are you?" "Great. How do you feel?" He shook his head sadly. "Not so

"Listen, Walter, you're not thinking for a minute that those two defeats will wipe out the eighteen years of wonderful pitching you have been through, do you?"

"Billy, that's nice of you to say such things, but I want to tell you that those games counted far more with me than the sum total of the hundreds I have pitched in my career."

That was Walter Johnson, Unselfish, thinking always of the other fellow. He wanted to win those world

A sad smile crossed his face, "Gee, Billy, I didn't think there'd be anybody wanting me to sign a ball now." "Don't you believe it. You'll always be the same old Walter Johnson to the fans, and don't let anybody, yourself included, tell you different. Now sign the balls,"

And he did. And his hand as he traced his signature, was as firm and steady as of old.

And later that day Walter Johnson, bravely walked onto the ball field into the toughest situation that ever a pitcher faced, and gave the most superb exhibition of courage, all things considered, that I have ever witnessed, brought victory to his team and Washington and everlasting glory to him-

I think that a kind Providence, watching over all things great and small, created that opportunity for Walter Johnson. Created It for him to carry him to the trlumph he so justly deserved.

Nothing in all the annals of baseball in sixty years can compare to the case of Melvin Ott. Here was a boy who had played only one summer on a semipro team in a small town in Louisiana who came straight to the New York Glants at the age of sixteenand stuck!

Ott never played professional ball and with the Giants. His story is more wonderful than anything in sensational fiction. He was not yet twenty-one years old when he slugged with Chuck Klein for the home run honors of his league in 1929 on even terms up to the very last series of the season.

Short Fiction Writer

CANNIE HURST is the I highest paid short story writer in the world today. There's a good reason for that She knows human nature and under the magic of her touch, the people about whom she writes become real people, not mere literary creations. The plots of her stories are based on incidents from real life as it is lived every day by the common people.

Such are the stories which are appearing in this newspaper. Be sure to read them and talk to your friends about them, for they like interesting stories, too. And Fannie Hurst's stories are interesting stories.

Dirt Always Falls To The Bottom of the Tub.

Basically, this new model is of the same fine quality as VOSS Washers which have sold in the past for as high as $150. It is made and fully guaranteed by the country's oldest manufacturers of washing machines, exclusively. Back of it is the VOSS reputation for quality, long-life and washing efficiency, established over a period of more than 54 years.

The ONLY washer at any price that CLEANS BY THE HAND-WASHING METHOD

The VOSS is the only washer that duplicates the gentle, thorough washing method you employ when you wash by hand. The VOSS alone, has a metal floating agitator, which washes in the clean, active suds at the top of the tub, away from the dirt which settles to the bottom. It brings to the electric washer all the gentle efficiency of washing by hand.

And, in addition, the VOSS has a full-size porcelain tub, Westinghouse motor, Lovell wringer with large 2 inch rolls, all mechanism fully enclosed and running in oil, beauty of line and finish, and other features of the high priced modern washers.

BRENNON LONGED FOR A HOME

By FANNIE HURST

WENTY-FIVE years is a long time to be heart, bone, and fiber part of a business, and then at the end of it feel frustration.

That however was the case with Charles Brennon, superintendent, proprietor, manager, and general manager of the Hotel Savoy, the first-rate hotel of a city of considerably over two hundred thousand inhabitants. Brennon had personally built up his hotel to its important proportions, dividing it successfully into two sections: The Annex, or family wing, and the hotel proper, which invited the patronage of translents and those who were availing themselves of the town's famous curative waters, which were renowned for their medicinal qual-

And so it happened that the Savoy catered to three distinct groups. Famllies. Commercial men and women. Rheumatic patients.

One might have thought that such variety of patronage would have lent Interest and even glamour to Brennon's role of botel man, and in a way it did, yet this same fact in itself was a factor in the ultimate sense of frustration that time and again, as he grew older and more deeply entrenched in his work, swept and depressed him,

What struck most painfully into the sense of loneliness which was more and more oppressing him in his daily life among the crowd, was the fact that of all the hundreds who daily milled in and out of his hostelry; lived there; entertained there; dined there; wined there, he alone seemed the homeless one. He alone, among all the coming and going, seemed to be the one who was neither coming nor going. Even the families in the Annex were usually there on a temporary basis; awaiting the completion of a new home; pending a marriage; taking a year off between changes of permanent address.

In fact, it was the familles in the Annex that contributed most of all to the growing unrest that was Brennon's. The unit of these little groups was so snug. Even sitting around with them of an evening in the lobby and then seeing them troop off towives trailing off together. Brothers to the credit of Brennon. and sisters bantering their way up to bed. Pairs of people sharing the intimacles of family life; of domestic life. Then, in the commercial and transient wings, men and women on their way to homes. Men and women eager for mail from homes, anxious to get back to domestic groups; awaited at some remote point by eager miracle." Twenty-five years of hotel life had made something of a self-pitier out of Brennon. He felt sorry over the cold detached quality of his existence. He felt left out. Left over.

But it was not until after twentyat fifty-three, a suddenly flourishing ecuted. hope and ambition for marriage.

Into a life peculiarly unremarkable where women were concerned, this new phase entered, taking him by storm. In his success and maturity, Brennon wanted marriage and domesticity; domesticity as far removed as possible from the lobby, the grillroom, or the thoroughfare.

These elements might have entered more surely into his reckoning except for the fact that at fifty-three, Brennon fell in love; fell in love to such an extent that had the widow Smeade stipulated that they live their lives out atop an omnibus, Brennon would have consented, Fortunately, however, the desires of the widow Smeade were simple, intelligent ones that fitted in nicely with his scheme. The Brennons chose a house on one of the private, restricted, residential streets of the town, furnished it to the Queen's and their own tastes, created a garden about it, stocked their garage with cars, hired servants, and set about the delightful business of making their house a home in every sense of the word.

And the new Mrs. Brennon had a knack. Under her firm and authentic touch, the home took on life, so to speak. In all his previous frustrated dreams, Brennon admitted to himself, he had never quite succeeded in visualizing the kind of perfection this woman brought to the creating of a Privacy, lovely furnishings, small personal touches of flowers in bowls arranged by her; color schemes worked out according to her knowledge of his taste; the bed folded back by her loving hands because she knew the way he liked his pillows piled. Sentimental, if you will, but where his new happiness was concerned, Brennon was unashamedly that.

It was not until after five years of their cloudless marriage that Brennon and his wife took their first trip out into the world which flowed about this home. They went to a city some four hundred miles removed from theirs, there to enjoy the theaters and concerts of the larger metropolis.

It was while they were at the Grand hotel there and enjoying what they were pleased to call their second honeymoon, that the opportunity to purchase the hostelry at an absurdly low price literally fell into Brennon's

At first the idea was preposterous and both he and his wife turned willing backs upon the entire idea. But strangely, in the case of both of them, the idea simply would not be downed. CHAPTER III—Continued

Rhoda read the thing straight through without making any pauses for reflection and analysis, and it wasn't until she got to the postscript that the false note began to sound loud enough to arouse her suspicion. Down to the first signature she never thought of doubting that the woman had worked for her father and had given him a paper to take care of for her. She wondered how the woman had found her and noted the fact that this wasn't explained, but she put it among the details that had been too numerous and complicated to write in a letter and assumed that it would be explained as soon as they met at lunch.

But with the beginning of the postscript she began to feel herself bristling with suspicion. Nevertheless she went on and read it through to the suddenly affectionate "Yours, Claire" before she let herself begin picking It to pieces.

This treacherous trick that some man had played upon her father, in order to make himself rich-had such a thing ever happened? In itself, it sounded fishy. Her father had never told her snything specific about his affairs, but she knew he must have been trying to discover or to invent something. The man might have stolen her father's discovery-if her father had ever succeeded in making It. But he hadn't succeeded. He'd gone on hoping to make it right up to the day he died.

When she reread the injunction not to answer any communication of any sort, the heavily underscored words flashed like a real danger signal. The "communication of any sort" was the advertisement for Rhoda McFarland. She knew who the woman was now: the woman Martin had tried to tell her about last night who'd been afraid she would answer the advertisement in the paper before they had time to take whatever steps they meant to take. She wished she remembered better what Martin had told her.

Who was the man Claire wanted to force to make things right-"as far as money could make anything right"? (The slimy hypocrisy of that afterthought turned Rhoda a bit sick.) Wasn't be most likely the Mr. Forster whose advertisement she was not on any account to answer? Wasn't he the "C. J." whom Martin had heard them talking about?

Well, one thing was settled, anyhow. She'd see Martin and get the details all straight before she went to lunch at the Tip-Top inn. If he happened to be waiting again at the foot of the elevated stairs that would make be likely to give away. everything ensy.

"Why did you think she was? What did she say she wanted? Have you got her letter here with you?"

She answered them, still trying to be cool about it, in reverse order. "No, naturally not. I put it away. Why, she said that a couple of years before my father dled she'd given him a paper to take care of for her, and that now she needed it terribly, and she thought I might be able to help her find it. She mustn't waste time thinking about him now, though-except as a warning not to lose her temper again. Her only reason for going to lunch with the woman was, as she had told Martin, to discover what it was all about: why these people she'd never heard of before wouldn't let her alone, She'd get nowhere by acting suspicious or by asking skeptical questions. The more confidently this Claire Cleveland took her for a light-wit the more she'd

CHAPTER IV

Martin Was Right

The first thought that flashed into her mind when she saw the woman who was sitting at the specified table was that there must be some mistake about it. Noting the black hat and followed her companion gladly enough, the dark blue dress didn't altogether since they'd been hurrying and had do away with it, either. The woman, despite her pretended hesitations and reluctances, was perfectly ready with her answer. Rhoda listened intently for a sentence or two and then more or less switched off her mind to other things. It was glaringly evident she was lying.

"That certainly is mighty sweet of you." Claire burst out, with a sudden suffusion of warmth, "It seems a sham to make you so much trouble-I'll tell you what we might do," she added. "Let me go along with you and help you look. I could probably find it quicker than you could because I know just what to look for."

The attempted casualness of the suggestion may have been a little overdone. Whether for that reason or another there flashed into Rhoda's memory, as clearly as if she were hearing it over a radio, a question Martin had asked her that morning: "What does she want to do; go over your father's papers and pick ou, what she likes?" It was a moment before she could not remove. trust her voice to answer and even then it didn't sound quite right,

"Oh, that won't be necessary," she said. "I'm sure I can fing it if it's there. And it won't be any trouble

Claire glanced at her watch and started a little. "Will you excuse me a moment, dearie?" she said. "I told a friend of mine that I didn't know whether I had a date for lunch today knew whether you'd come. And I said and let them know."

Her departure worried Rhoda little, principally because she had only two dollars with her. What if Claire had fled and left her with that enormous lunch to pay for! Really Claire wasn't gone very long but her return when she came was such a relief that for a moment Rhoda almost thought she liked her.

But that state of feeling didn't last long. Claire's manner had changed a little and had become vaguely disquieting. She talked between and during mouthfuls all through the rest of the meal, about anything or nothing. The meal seemed interminable. dragged to an end at last. But when, having set down her empty demitasse, Rhoda moved back her chair a little as a preliminary to saying she must go, Claire suddenly found that she had something left to say.

"I said in my letter," she began, "that if any stranger tried to communicate with you in any way, hoped you wouldn't answer him until you'd had this talk with me. You haven't have you?" "No, I guess not," Rhoda told her, alert again and answering as casually as she could. "I don't believe I know "All she asked me to do," Rhoda | what I couldn't. And I thought it | what you mean. What sort of communication?"

"You haven't seen it, then," Claire said, with a sigh of relief, "or you'd know. It was just a guess of mine and maybe I'm all wrong. This dirty old goat that I've been telling you about, the one that made me all my trouble-I've sort of got him on the brain, I guess. . . ." This much o what she was saying, Rhoda reflected, was probably true. The hatred in the woman's voice sounded genuine, any

Steel Plow in America

In this country, about 1797, John Newbold demonstrated a cast-iron plow. It was similar to cast-iron plows which had been demonstrated shortly before in England. Records indicate that farmers feared detrimental effects from so much iron in contact with the soil, and evidently this first American cast-iron plow was never repaired after its moldboard became broken. The obstinate quality of the soil in the Mississippi valley led to the use of steel instead of iron strips on the moldboards of plows. John Deere, 1837, and William Parlin, 1842, were pioneers in the steel plow business of the Middle West. Much credit is due also to James Oliver, who, beginning his experiments in 1853, greatly advanced the process for chilling cast-iron plow points.

Scriptural Books

"Ecclesiastes" and "Ecclesiasticus" are the names of different portions of the Scriptures. The former is accepted by both Catholics and Protestants as one of the essential and canonical books of the Bible. "Ecclesiasticus," or "Wisdom of Jesus, Son of Sirach" as it is also called, is the name of a portion of the Catholic Bible. It was included in the canon fixed by the Council of Trent (1545-1563) and is classified as one of the deuterocanonical books. Protestants regard Ecclesiasticus as one of the Apocrapha and consequently, although they read it for inspiration and edification, they do not use it to fix points of doctrine.-Pathfinder Magazine.

In case the ant burrows are numerous enough to form a mound, holes are made in the mound about a foot apart by driving an inch stake down about ten or twelve inches. A quarter of a pint of carbon disulphide is then poured into each hole and the opening plugged with soil. The entire mound is then covered with s piece of old carpet or burlap previously soaked in water and left covered for twenty-four hours.

Granulated or powdered calcium synanide may be used instead of carbon disulphide providing the ant nest openings are enlarged and a teaspoonful used to each burrow.

Both of these chemicals must be handled with extreme care the entomologist warns. Their fumes are deadly and should not be breathed by enyone.

HOT LUNCH PROJECT IN COUNTRY SCHOOL

Miss Schloemer, teacher of the Elm wood School in Jackson Township, has been conducting a rural school hot lunch project the past year, which proved very effective. In a letter written to Ruby McKenzie, County Nurse, which we feel will be of interest to local readers of the Statesman, Miss Schloemer has the following story to relate:

Dear Miss McKenzie:--

"Enclosed is a report of the Health Project of our school. I am sure you will be interested to know how easily it is done and yet be so profitable.

The schoolyear is again drawing to a close and to Elmwood School it means the close of perfect "Health Year." Many health projects have been worked out, but due to many children being underweight the need for a project to increase weight was considered the most important.

No child can do his required work if he is under nourished, nor can he be expected to gain enough weight if he has not the proper food. A dinner including several sandwiches, a piece of cake, an orange or apple, may do well enough for a day or two, but having a cold dinner day after day will certainly not help the child gain weight and vitality. Either a glass of hot cocoa or a bowl of hot soup or hot vegetables will so help to make that dinner complete. It can be done very easily and economically. No teacher need say, "But I havn't the time," or "I can't cook a thing." Our school has had hot lunches throughout the entire year by means of the simple "boiler method." The equipment needed is an oil stove or electric plate, and a boiler with a rack. Mothers are requested to fill a pint jar with prepared cocoa, soup, Wisconsin ranked first among the stew, or vegetable for each child. In order to make it more interesting I have a different contest for each month—a star as a reward to climb a ladder or complete a health wheel, etc. It is indeed interesting to note how the like will stimulate the child's interest, and the wonderful co-operation that will be given by the child-
