L. P. Schaefer was elected president of the newly formed Lions Club of Kewaskum, at a dinner meeting of the businessmen at the Republican Club, Monday evening, July 12. Schmidt was elected secretary of the club, and other officers were chosen as follows: President—John Marx; Vice President—A. W. Koch; Treasurer—D. J. Harbeck; Secretary—B. H. Rosenheimer; Directors—Otto E. Lay, Clom Reinhold, H. W. Quade and Carl F. Schaefer.

The businessmen here view the formation of a Lions Club as a progressive step in business organization. The club is a part of the work of organization, and how it works in the village. Theo. R. Schmidt was elected secretary of the club, and other officers were chosen as follows: President—John Marx; Vice President—A. W. Koch; Treasurer—D. J. Harbeck; Secretary—B. H. Rosenheimer; Directors—Otto E. Lay, Clom Reinhold, H. W. Quade and Carl F. Schaefer.

There are 2500 Lions Clubs located in every state in the Union, Canada, Mexico, Cuba, Alaska, Hawaii, China, and there are 68 Lions Clubs in Wisconsin. The club is a part of the work of organization, and how it works in the village. Theo. R. Schmidt was elected secretary of the club, and other officers were chosen as follows: President—John Marx; Vice President—A. W. Koch; Treasurer—D. J. Harbeck; Secretary—B. H. Rosenheimer; Directors—Otto E. Lay, Clom Reinhold, H. W. Quade and Carl F. Schaefer.

Lions Clubs are non-secret, non-political, non-sectarian, non-profit organizations of representative men in every community, who feel an interest in the welfare and progress of their community. No man is asked to join a Lions Club for "what he can get out of it" but rather for what he can do for his community, working together with a group of his fellowmen. That is why these clubs are called service clubs. In communities like Kewaskum, these clubs take the place of commercial clubs or chambers of commerce, and they have the added advantage of being associated with hundreds of other clubs doing the same type of work, so that they derive the benefit of the best experiences of all these other clubs.

The Lions Club is very zealous about attendance of its membership at meetings, and every Lion is expected to attend every meeting unless he is sick or out of town. Lions consider it an obligation to their community to attend club meetings every week, to consider that they owe something to the community in which they live, to enjoy it in some measure a small part of the many fine things which they receive from the community, to live as good living, pleasant associations, the benefits of church and club, and a home.

Lions Club meetings are always held on Tuesday evenings (supper optional) limited to not exceed one hour fifteen minutes. Business is transacted at the table, and discussions held on various subjects of interest to the group.

The first Governor of Lions Clubs in Wisconsin, Mr. Lawton Curvey of Fond du Lac, City Attorney, will present the charter to this club at a special banquet meeting to be held within the next month. At that time the Lions will invite the Lionesses to attend also, and Lions and their ladies will come here from other cities to help mark the installation of the Kewaskum Lions.

Immediately after the dinner meeting on Tuesday, Mr. and Mrs. Slater left by car for Toronto, Canada, to attend the International Lions convention which is in session there all this week.

Following are the members of the newly organized Lions Club: Dr. Leo C. Brauchle, William Endlich, George Rippenhan, Arthur W. Koch, Otto E. Lay, John Marx, Edw. E. Miller, Dr. E. F. Nolting, Myron Perschbacher, Henry W. Quade, Clem Reinders, Rayn M. Romaine, H. H. Rosenheimer, P. P. Rosenheimer, Arthur Schaefer, Carl F. Schaefer, Theodore R. Schmidt, William F. Schultz, Ed. Skupniewitz, D. J. Harbeck.

The next luncheon meeting of the club will be held at the Republican Club at 12 o'clock noon of Tuesday, July 28.

Notice: The Sunday School of the Ev. St. congregation will hold their picnic on the church grounds on Sunday afternoon, July 19. Music will be furnished by the Campbellsville Band. A cordial invitation extended to all. 7 10 2t.

WILL BE FURNISHED RETURN TRANSPORTATION

Shippers of livestock into Chicago from within a radius of 200 miles of the city will be furnished return transportation by the Chicago and North Western Railway for drivers accompanying one car shipments after August 1, according to H. W. Beyers, vice-president-traffic of the railway. Heretofore shippers have been given return transportation only when having two or more cars for the market. The change will be a distinct benefit for small shippers and feeders and will be tried out for the one year on an experimental basis. It will be continued if it proves satisfactory. The Chicago and North Western Railway is also working on a plan to reduce minimums on livestock shipments into the city so that smaller lots of livestock may be routed by rail. Something along that line will be offered in a short time.

WASH. CO., NOT HIT HARD BY ARMY WORM

Washington county has not yet been hit so hard by the Army Worm as some neighboring counties; however, a considerable number of fields are infested and damage has been done and is now being done in spots. Continued warm dry weather is bringing about conditions which make the pest a real menace and farmers can well be on the alert. The worms have been caught at work so far in the county on alfalfa, sweet clover, tame grass and corn. They work rapidly, mostly in the late evening and inasmuch as they usually appear suddenly in large numbers it is important to detect them early by keeping alfalfa, grain, potatoes and corn fields under close observation. They can easily be poisoned by a poison bait made of bran, molasses, crude white arsenic or paris green (lead arsenate will not do) and water mixed to a crumbly consistency. The cost of poisoning will run about 20 cents per acre. White arsenic is much cheaper than paris green and can be obtained at the County Agent's office.

The army worm is a species of cutworm and gets its name from the habit of working in large numbers and traveling together. There are always army worms but only in damaging numbers when the fly which ordinarily keeps it down is not present in concentrated numbers. In many cases the infestation on alfalfa this year is peculiar in that when the field has been stripped the pest remains eating shoots as they appear rather than migrating to some new area.

ST. KILIAN PLAYS FLASCH BROS. GARAGE TEAM SUNDAY

The second game of the three game series between the St. Kilian and the Milwaukee Flasch Brothers Garage teams is scheduled to take place at St. Kilian, Sunday, July 19. It is predicted that the game will be a tough battle, probably a pitcher's duel. This statement may be censured by the score of the last game when St. Kilian rallied to win by a 9 to 8 count. The financial backers of the visiting team claim St. Kilian as their home town and are ever anxious to conquer the St. Kilian prodigies.

KEWASKUM WINS FROM OSCEOLA ASHFORD HERE NEXT SUNDAY

Before a large crowd, the Kewaskum base ball team defeated the Osceola team at the local base ball park, Sunday afternoon by a score of 7 to 9. The game was a hotly contested one, full of thrilling moments and excitement. With the score close at all times, it was nobody's game until the last man was put out in the ninth inning. Osceola, the hardest hitting team in the league, and who up to two weeks ago played in hard luck, have strengthened their lineup wonderfully, and now have a fast and snappy ball club. In order that the locals might win, meant that they had to play real base ball at all times. Kewaskum was the first to score in the third inning. The bombardment then started in the fourth inning when B. Bohlman Osceola's first baseman, connected with the pill for a home run. The ball traveled far over the wire fence at the north end of the ball park. It was the longest hit made here this year. In the fifth inning J. Farris, shortstop for the visitors clouted out another home run into deep right field, the ball rolled through the north fence, making the score 2 to 1 in favor of Osceola. In this inning the locals came back strong, collecting enough hits to put three runs across the home plate, making the score 4 to 2 in Kewaskum's favor. The locals then scored one run in the sixth and one in the seventh bringing the score up to 7 to 2. Osceola then scored two runs in the seventh and three in the ninth, giving them a 6 to 7 lead in the first half of the ninth. In the last half of the ninth, Eldon Ramthun first man up to bat, received a walk, Kral next in line got a nice two bagger putting a man on third and one on second. Steele, Kewaskum's hardest and safest hitter then in line, drove the ball through the fence for a home run, ending the game in the local's favor.

Hawley—United States Marshal C. H. Rawlinson has stamped padlocks on thirty-one saloons here. The action resulted from a series of raids Apr. 1, when 63 men and women were arrested. Only six saloons in the heart of Silver street, lumberjack night life spot, escaped padlocks.

Oconto Falls—The serious unemployment situation was further complicated when the attorney general's office ruled that the city may not borrow $600 monthly for relief from Oconto county. Last year the village's only industry, the Falls Manufacturing Co., paper makers, closed down.

Stevens Point—A serious potato crop failure is reported by many farmers, principally in central and southern Portage county, who say that never in the history of the potato industry in the county have stands been as uneven and poor. From 75 to 90 per cent of the hills of potatoes are missing in the worst fields, while in many others 50 to 55 per cent of the crop is not coming up. This condition is puzzling the farmers, but is a general belief that it is due to the condition of the seed because of the hot, dry season in 1929. They believe the seed was not properly matured.

HOOVER'S DEBT PLAN GOES INTO EFFECT

Agreement on Moratorium Is Reached With France.

Washington—Complete suspension of all intergovernmental debts growing out of the World war was assured when President Hoover announced that his proposal for a year's moratorium had been universally accepted in principle.

The announcement came with the complete recession of France from the earlier position looking toward continued German payments in kind, which amount to more than $20,000,000 a year. Andrew W. Mellon, secretary of the treasury, informed the President by transatlantic telephone that France had agreed to the American suggestion that the question of deliveries in kind be referred to a commission of experts bound by "the spirit of the President's proposal."

This was the last outstanding point of difference between Washington and Paris which had held up the Hoover plan. In effect, it means that the allied nations will suspend German reparations payments for the year which began July 1 in return for a like postponement of their debts to the United States.

The proposal presages a new lease of life for Germany, both economically and politically, and the agreement was hailed widely as a development likely to set the flow of world business in full tide toward renewed prosperity. President Hoover himself heralded the plan as one calculated to swing the minds of men "from fear to confidence" and "bring hope for the future."

As a further step in the program for the economic relief of the world, the President took occasion in his announcement to center world attention again upon the burdens of competitive armaments. With an eye to the general disarmament conference at Geneva in February, Mr. Hoover declared that "we must have relief from these fundamental burdens, which today amount to several times the amount of intergovernmental debts."

By the Hoover plan Germany will be relieved of reparations payments to the former allied and associated governments totaling nearly $400,000,000.

Great Britain, France, Italy, Belgium, and other debtors will be relieved of war debt payments amounting $400,000,000.

The greatest sacrifice will be made by the United States, which will forego war debt receipts totaling $260,000,000.

A renewed invitation to a conference in London of the powers chiefly concerned in the operation of the Hoover moratorium plan was issued by Prime Minister MacDonald of Great Britain.

London Still Is Biggest City in Whole World

London, July 6.—Women continue to lead the men in England as far as the population is concerned. The figures of the census taken in England and Wales in April show a surplus of more than 1,800,000 females in proportion to males, the highest discrepancy on record.

The total population is approximately 44,800,000, which is 2,000,000 more than in 1921. Although England is probably the world's most densely populated country, excluding Belgium, having almost 700 persons per square mile, its remarkably low birth rate heralds a decline in population in the future.

Greater London continues to be the world's largest city, with a population of 8,202,818, having increased about 10 per cent over 1921. Greater New York's latest census showed 6,931,917 persons there. The ratio of the city and rural populations is 80 per cent to 20 in favor of the cities. The most interesting feature of the statistics is the preponderance of women in the southeastern metropolises.

California Fights Many Fires in Hills and Plains

San Francisco.—Flames left blackened wastes in more than a dozen different parts of California as hundreds of weary fire fighters continued efforts to subdue the blazes in heat-stricken hills and plains.

Mountain towns, ranch houses, herds of cattle, stands of timber, ripened grain and valuable pasture fell before the onslaught of fire.

A force of 700 men was fighting a 25,000-acre blaze which swept up three sides of Mount Diablo, Contra Costa county. Damage was estimated at $100,000. The fighters were attempting to keep the blaze, which at times burned on a fourteen-mile front, from Marsh Creek canyon, on the west slope of the mountain where there are dozens of summer homes and ranches.

ROCKEFELLER IS 92; THANKS THE WORLD

Celebrates Birthday Quietly in Tarrytown Home.

New York.—John D. Rockefeller celebrated his ninety-second birthday twenty years after he gave up the control of seven-eighths of the oil industry of this country, to devote himself to the business of living indefinitely.

In a public message on the eve of his birthday, he expressed as much pride in his health as he did in his wealth as a symbol of successful public service in 1911, when he retired from business.

Having relieved himself at that time of about $1,000,000,000 in capital holdings by turning them over to his son, John D., Jr., to be expended "for the benefit of all mankind," Mr. Rockefeller has spent the last twenty years in contentment and increasing health, happy to be known as "Neighbor John," who in moments of exuberance gives away a shining new dime.

"These occasions," he said, "offer me a very welcome opportunity: first, to express my gratitude to the many, many friends who not only at this time but throughout the year have shown their kindly regard for me; and second, to wish them and theirs and all the world a large measure of health and contentment, which are the basis of real happiness."

Free from any worry, Mr. Rockefeller looks forward to each birthday as an achievement in contentment. The celebration at the family estate at Tarrytown, N. Y., was the quietest ever. There were no fireworks and no band. At 6 o'clock there was a birthday supper attended by Mr. and Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., their married daughter, Abbie, and her husband, David Milton, together with four other Rockefeller children.

No Wage Reductions on New Chicago Post Office

Chicago.—No wage cuts for laborers or building trades mechanics who work on the new $20,000,000 Chicago post office will be tolerated by the United States.

That the men must be paid the prevailing wage scale was a featured clause in the official notice calling for bids. The notice was made public here and called for a maximum building contract of $14,500,000. The maintenance of the standard wage is a legal provision, according to the official memorandum.

Bids called for are returnable on July 29 and will be opened on August 10, and include not only the work but the furnishing of the materials. Ten days are provided for consideration of the bids by the government, with a similar period to follow for the contractor to furnish bond. Beginning of operations by September 1 is indicated.

"MONEY WIZARD" OF SOUTH FOUND GUILTY

Caldwell Is Convicted of Fraud in Nashville.

Nashville, Tenn.—Rogers Caldwell, once a financial giant of the "new South," whose investment house of Caldwell & Co. boasted "we bank on the South," was convicted of fraudulent breach of trust for the manner of his company's handling a $200,000 county highway bond purchase.

It was the end of the first of a number of trials the once powerful banker faces in Kentucky and Tennessee. Caldwell has been indicted by federal and state grand juries in both states on charges of conspiracy and entering false statements in writing.

The verdict of the jury carried with it a recommendation for a sentence of one to three years in the state penitentiary, but the trial judge, Chester K. Hart, reserved sentence. Motion for a new trial was entered by Caldwell's attorneys.

Caldwell took the news of his conviction calmly, comforting his mother, wife and venerable father, James E. Caldwell, retired bank president. His only comment was "this verdict is a great surprise to me."

The convicted banker was permitted to remain free on the same bond he posted upon being indicted and is expected to appeal the decision of the lower court if a new trial is not granted.

Excitement ran riot here as the conviction of Caldwell was announced in extra editions of all papers. Since the collapse of Caldwell's financial house last November, political factions within the Democratic party have kept the state in turmoil battling for and against the factions allegedly allied with Caldwell. The verdict was held by many to be a vindication of officials of prosecution from charges of being influenced in their handling of the crash.

Conviction of Caldwell ends the spectacular career of the forty-one-year-old banker who had achieved financial dominance of the South in fourteen years.

A year before the United States entered the World war he organized Caldwell & Co. with a capital of $100,000. When his company and 54 other affiliated banks crashed he had increased his capital stock to $2,000,000 with more than $50,000,000 resources.

Student Slides to Mt. Rainier

Tacoma, Wash.—Robert K. Zinn, twenty-one, Portland (Ore.) mountain climber, slid down an icy incline near the summit of Mount Rainier into a crevasse 1,200 feet deep.

The brothers sat down to rest and Robert started sliding toward the crevasse. Kenneth attempted to aid his brother, witnesses reported, and was also sliding when his descent was stopped by Nelson Widman, a guide.

Her husband, Hoffman and Kopitzke died at a barn dance June 20 after drinking liquor which, District Attorney Lloyd Smith charged, was poisoned by Riske.

Brown Smart for Town or

European throne of Ethel...

It's every detail. The jacket is of brown checked cloth, fastening on the white flat crepe ascot tie.

As the days go on the vogue for brown is more pronounced. The usual black leather band on the panamas has been replaced with brown.

The same is true of wear, the newest styles are white buckram, brown leather or instead of black.

And have you seen "double-date" dresses of blue smart and as they are called double-date. The moment the twinkling of an eye brought in a new ensemble, the striped sleeveless flat crepe, the sort of redingote or silk coat which is worn under it.

For afternoons tone down a brown-and-white print frock, to which by way of a postscript add a white taffeta silk jacket, also one of brown transparent velvet just for a change. A turban of straw and white pleated silk speaks that which is swankiest in millinery if you do not prefer a white panama with a brown velvet or grosgrain band. It goes without saying that gloves with this outfit should be white and long loose-fitting, while shoes may be either white or white with brown.

BLACK AND WHITE REMAINS IN FAVOR

Black and white continues to be a combination greatly in favor wherever smart women dine. The degree of taste and perfection which is used in this combination has a direct bearing on the effect of the costume. The all-white hat, the white glove and chalk-white jewelry has much to do with its success, says a fashion correspondent in the Kansas City Star.

White linen has a crispness which no one can deny, especially when it is combined with a black hat, either of coarse straw with a glazed surface or one of the crocheted straws. No one has ever known the exact percentage of white to advise in combination with black. Fashion is favoring the black satin skirt and the cream lace blouse for informal dining. This may be worn with a white or an egg-shell jacket.

Contrast is the watchword for the linen suit. The white skirt with the navy jacket has by far and away given the brown and white combinations a race for popularity, while red and white, or a cherry red linen skirt and a french blue handkerchief linen surplus blouse are in the height of fashion.

Or listen to this combination which was worn at the horse show in Tuxedo park by New York debutantes: White dresses accompanied by very short white wool capes, and a red and green sash at the belt and with these small white visca caps.

Longer Evening Coats to Return for Winter

The longer evening coats show signs of returning next winter, advises a Paris fashion writer in the New York Times. Lucile Paray favors slightly trailing evening coats, in velvet of the same color as frocks—which just escape the floor. Germaine Lecomte makes three-quarter evening coats of Lyons velvet or velveteen that contrast with the frock. A tiger-colored velveteen coat with a black frock is a striking example. Irene Dana has an attractive floor-length evening coat of pale pink velveteen.

Short jackets are by no means abandoned. Worth and Irene Dana both show white cross-barred velvet jackets barely below waistlength, and Worth's new summer and winter jackets of the most attractive evening wraps invented. They are cut with a dropped shoulder line and draped in around the waist, stopping just above the hip bones. One is of black broadtail with puffed sleeves of white satin; another of pale gray broadtail with huge sleeves in silver lame.

Fashion Notes That Will Appeal to Light tweeds are still being worn in smart circles. Black, white, wine red, green and brown are cited as the smartest colors in evening wraps.

Separate ribbon belts in a variety of colors are selected to be worn with white frocks this summer. Ardanne has won considerable fame because of a frock called "The Kangaroo" which has a kangaroo pocket.

Polish Gentleman Is No Apollo, But He Sure Has a Way With Women

Warsaw.—Leo Weidenberg, a tailor by profession and a husband by avocation, is front-page copy for the Warsaw newspapers, and his genius deserves even wider attention. Although he is sixty-one years old and the owner of a red beard and an ugly nose, he has been married eight times and his offspring number 46.

When his eighth wife appeared before a magistrate recently in a plea for a divorce she brought with her five other wives, all undivorced, to aid her cause. But she did not consider that all seven women of tender hearts and staunch attachment to her philandering husband. The moment Weidenberg was brought in all the former Mrs. Weidenbergs started a fight for him. During the scramble Weidenberg modestly disappeared and for all anybody knows is marrying again.

Decides to Travel. Maritime stories of his escapades abound. Forty-three years ago Weidenberg then a youth of eighteen, came to Warsaw as a tailor's apprentice, known among his chums as "Red" because of his flaming hair. He married Rebecca Frol and during seven years of wedlock five children were born.

The he disappeared. All search for him was in vain and his wife and children suffered great need. Weidenberg had decided to travel. He went to Russia and after changing from the Russian faith to Russian orthodox, he married a girl and begot five children. After eight years of marriage in Russia, his wife seized him again and returned to Poland. On a river boat from Warsaw to Plock he fell in love with a Jewish girl named Zelenka. Having his old partner was married by a rabbi and four years later four children were born to this union.

Changes Faith Again. While he met Mary Nowak. Weidenberg decided to change his faith again, becoming a Roman Catholic. There followed another marriage, and twice, ten years later he was in Piotrkow and there met John Silva, a member of the Marjawi sect of the Catholic church, unrecognized by the pope. Weidenberg became a Marjawi and married Jean. Five children blessed this union.

Weidenberg then went to America. There followed a marriage to Wilma, a widow of New York. Two children were born and he returned to Poland, a deportee. He continued his career through two more marriages.

Lips and Eyes Tested as Keys to Character

Oxford, England.—The theory that lips and eyes are a key to vocation and character, suggested by Professor Bettmann, the Helioberg dermatologist, was tested at a gathering at an Old Oxonian residence at Oxford university. Many men distinguished in different walks of life were chosen for the test. It was found that while there was some similarity between certain features and character, the theory appeared correct only in the generalized sense, but there was no exception. The legal profession, it was found, had the predominant facial feature—the thin lip. Professor Bettmann maintains that "thin lips have the thinnest lips."

Hunt Wild Cattle on Alaskan Isle

Barrow, Alaska.—Bullfighting is a new sport in Alaska. Capt. Axel Olovson and three cowboy helpers from the old-time Bar-X Montana ranch were contracted to round up and slaughter for the meat trade a part of the herd of wild cattle roaming the wooded hills of Chirikof.

In 1901, a bull and three cows were shipped to Chirikof to form a dairy herd for the Semdi fur farm. The project failed and the cattle were abandoned. A herd of several hundred animals formed the descendants of the cow bovines. They are wild and have long, pointed horns. They are wild and have long, pointed horns. Olson and his helpers have succeeded in slaughtering the cattle mounted. On the island near Chirikof's best harbor a slaughterhouse has been erected. Fresh

Low Grade Oil Is Now Bringing Highest Price

Los Angeles.—When an "upside-down" schedule of prices for crude oil was posted by buyers here recently, with the lowest grade of crude oil, with the highest prices, recommending operators quietly devised a scheme for treating their product to get higher gasoline!

They steamed out the gasoline! Back of the stunt, of course, was the price cut. Crude oil of 30 gravity, rather high in gasoline content, was bringing only 35 cents a barrel, due to the overproduction of the fuel.

of marble, neatly chiseled. Together with timbers from the house in which they were placed nearly a hundred years ago, they will become a part of the Second Presbyterian parish house, now under construction. Brigham Young's boyhood days were spent in Port Byron, in the heart of the Finger lake region of New York.

Hunter Bros. Retain Air Refueling Record

Washington.—The Federation Aeronautique Internationale of France, because of certain technical conditions, has not approved the refueling endurance record of Dale Jackson and Forest O'Brien, made last year near St. Louis. They stayed aloft 647 hours and 28 minutes. Since their record has not been approved the official refueling record is still held by the Hunter brothers, 553 hours and 41 minutes.

Raise Egg Production by More Rigid Culling

(By H. A. SEATON, Extension Poultryman, Kansas State Agriculture College.) It is possible to make $1 more per bird on flocks averaging 190 eggs than on flocks laying 120. The increase in returns is due to high average egg production. Culling is one factor responsible for the higher average.

Turkey Producers Are to Sell on Roadside

Turkey producers are able to reach consumers through roadside markets, retail routes or by mail in efforts to sell direct.

Poultry Facts

Late-hatched chicks should not be forgotten.

The common practice of keeping the eggs in the kitchen should especially be avoided.

Do not dope well turkeys, but give them plenty of free range and keep them away from the poultry flock.

Poor layers usually molt earlier than good ones. Heavy layers generally do not begin to molt before September or October.

Confine broody hens the first night they stay on the nest to a roomy coop in a shady, comfortable location and then feed them mash and milk once a day, with moist mash in addition.

Mud on the shoes of attendants caring for chicks in wet weather may account for worm infestations in lots of chicks even grown on clean ground.

The time required to turn a broody hen, or "ducker," into a layer is a real test of a poultryman's ability. Well-balanced and adequate feeding, along with the right kind of housing, are largely the determining factors.

All grain and mash should be fed to the chicks in clean hoppers or troughs. This practice may reduce the spread of coccidiosis, round worms, tape worms, and other troubles which may be picked up by the chicks if their feed is scattered in dirty litter or on contaminated ground.

Explaining Ghosts. Lucretius, in the first century before the Christian era, attacked the idea of ghosts, by maintaining that they were not spirits returned from the dead, but nothing more than mere films or membranes off from the surface of all bodies.

POULTRY

RANGE SHELTERS HELP CHICKENS

Protection Afforded by Simple Covering.

Summer range shelters for pullets make it possible for the flock to obtain the advantages of open range conditions and at the same time offer the birds protection from summer heat and rains, says C. M. Ferguson, extension specialist in poultry at the Ohio State university.

In bulletin, such a shelter, he points out, it is best to follow tested plans. In general, the low gable roof type of range shelter has proven to be the most satisfactory. It is close to the ground, resists the wind much better than the high type, and is of such shape that it can be made from light material.

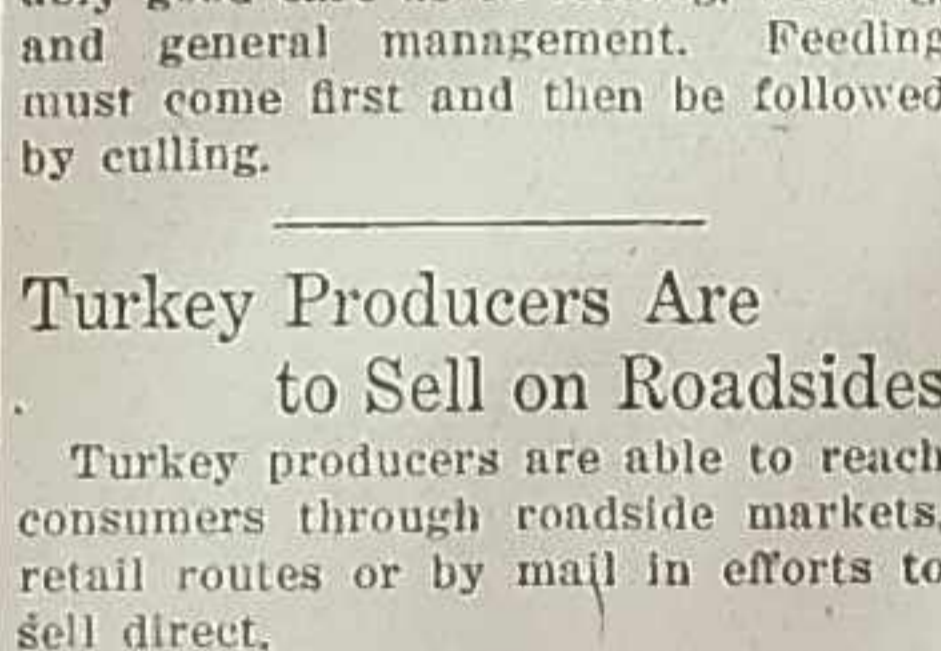

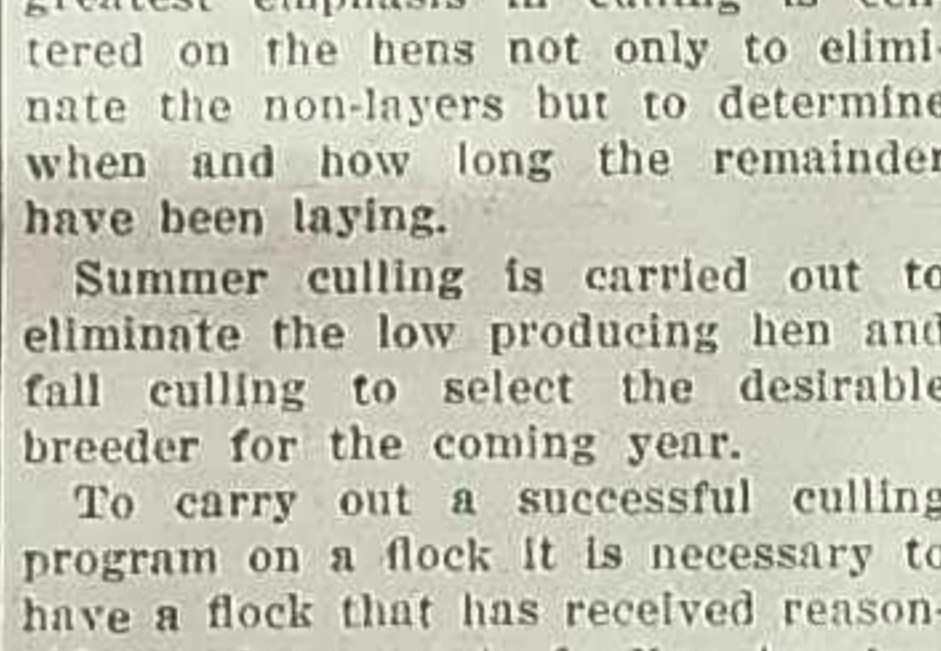

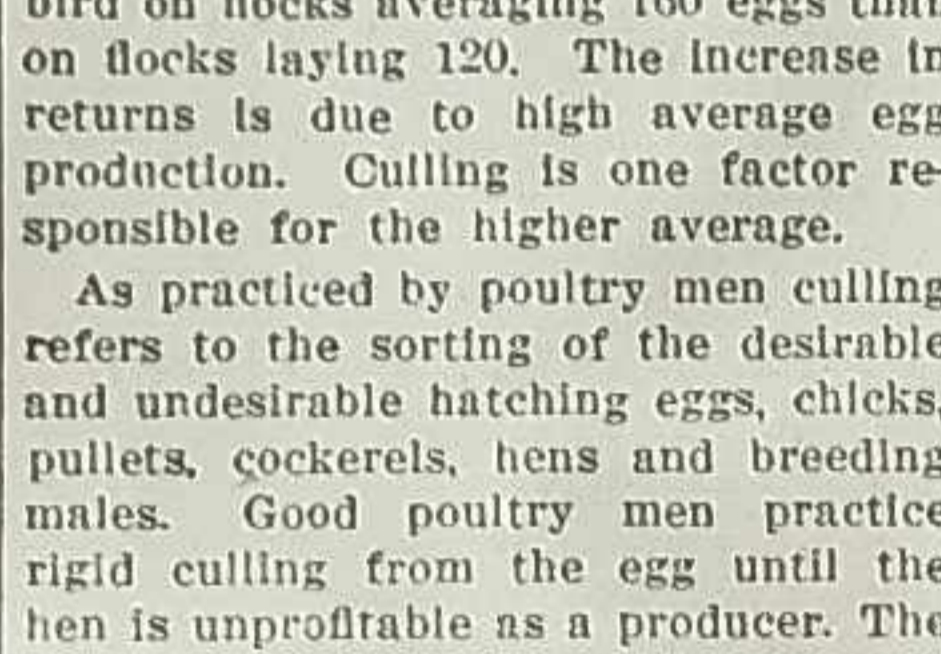

Plans drawn by the state university show a shelter 8 feet, 10 inches wide, 18 inches high at the eaves with an even roof span and a 5-foot 10 1/2-inch rafter. A plan of this kind permits use of 1 inch by three inch material for the frame and the use of building board for roofing. The closely compressed type of building boards are best, he states. They should, however, be treated with a coat of asphalt roofing paint.

An 8-foot shelter will accommodate from 100 to 125 birds. The ends, sides, and floor of the shelter are constructed of wire. This protects the pullets from the attacks of skunks and weasels, and the wire floor aids in getting the pullets to roost early. They prefer getting on the roosts next to the roof than to sitting on the wire floors.

By placing skids under the shelter, it may be moved easily, Ferguson states. This makes it easy to clean and to transfer to new locations on the range.

Highest Paid Short Fiction Writer

FANNIE HURST is the highest paid short story writer in the world today. There's a good reason for that. She knows human nature and under the magic of her touch, the people about whom she writes become real people, not mere literary creations. The plots of her stories are based on incidents from real life as it is lived every day by the common people. Such are the stories which are appearing in this newspaper. Be sure to read them and talk to your friends about them, for they like interesting stories, too. And Fannie Hurst's stories are interesting stories.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

There are many brownstone houses still left on the side streets of New York. Now that daylight saving gives us long twilight hours after the work of the day is over, you see the high steps leading up to the doors of these houses covered with the inhabitants, just as you might see persons sitting on the front steps in any little town. New York is only a collection of little towns held together by a city charter. Not only the streets but the roofs are rest or play areas in summer. I am not talking of penthouse roofs, but just of the ordinary roofs of buildings.

others are furnished on request. Mrs. Kendall had, for some reason, experienced considerable difficulty in getting one book, but had finally obtained it. Now it seems that when the dinner was over and only the men were left at the table, the conversation turned to feats of strength. Count von Luckner is very big, very likable, and very strong. In discussing such feats as tearing packs of cards and other things in two, he offered to illustrate his point, and material was furnished for the demonstration. When Mrs. Kendall next saw her prized telephone papers carry stories of the thousands who will be benefited but they rarely mention the few who may be crushed by the wheels of progress. There are, for example, two women who have been running a newsstand for many years. It has furnished them with a decent livelihood, perhaps clothed and educated their children. Recently those women have been looking worried and forlorn. The opening of a new subway has diverted traffic from their stand and it looks as if they might have to give it up.

Women are much more particular about their hairdressers than men are about their barbers. So long as a man doesn't get the old country bowl haircut, he is pretty well satisfied, but there appear to be dozens of ways of cutting and fixing a woman's hair. I book, it was torn neatly in four pieces.

When New York opens a new subway, the mayor usually drives the first train through it and there are speeches and a general celebration in which the officials of the company and citizen committees take part. News-have known women to come back to town in summer from places which were an over-night trip, just to have their hair done by their accustomed coiffeur. At the present time, my wife is disconsolate because her favorite hairdresser, Pierre, is moving to Cleveland.

The KITCHEN CABINET

FOOD FOR THE FUSSY

There are grown-ups who are fussy about their food, but sometimes they are hopeless; however with children a firm hand and eternal vigilance will accomplish wonders. Children are naturally imaginative and heed, enjoy a fairy tale, no matter what it is about. Why not use this method in teaching him to eat the things he should. Every woman should be a good story teller, able to picture interesting things out of the ordinary. With really ill people in bed, one may use about the same story for even grown ups, they get pleasure out of the things that the child will, if presented in a whimsical manner.

Floating Island.—This old-fashioned dish of our grandmother's day will never go out of style, for it is so wholesome and good as well as pretty. To prepare the custard take three egg yolks, four tablespoons of sugar, a pinch of salt, one and one-half cups of scalded milk and when cooked until it coats the spoon add one-half teaspoonful of vanilla to flavor. For the island, beat the whites of the eggs until stiff, add four tablespoons of sugar and drop by spoonfuls on hot water in a shallow pan. Cook until firm or set in the oven to brown. Remove the islands to the custard, chill and serve. Our grandmothers used to cook the egg white on top of the custard while it was cooking, thus they conserved time and heat.

A dish of floating island, so good for children who will not eat custards and refuse milk, may be presented in a glass dish with the cooked white of eggs on top. It may be a treasure island, or a iceberg with a "nut" to be rescued or a raisin will do. If it is not real enough make legs and arms of it, use a head of a large clove. The rescuer will eat his way to being a hero.

Bolt Opens Big Hole in Automobile's Path

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"BAD CESS TO YOU!"

HERE is an idiom exclusively Irish in nativity and which is understood to mean "May ill luck attend you!"

While this expression bears all the earmarks of an imprecation of curse, it really sounds much worse than it connotes today, its usage being quite similar to our, "Oh, go to the devil!"

As already indicated, the line is Irish in origin, "cess" being the Gaelic for "board and lodging!"

The Children's Corner

Edited by DOROTHY EDMONDS

Hanako's Holiday

Little Hanako Tanako opened her eyes slowly. She raised her black head from the wooden pillow and stared at the sunlight coming through the paper walls.

She rolled quickly out of bed, which was made of soft quilts piled on the floor. She put on her gayest, brightest kimono with big red flowers on it, her white stockings which had places made for the big toes, and she slipped her feet into her red sandals.

"Good morning, little one," said a gentle voice as her mother came into the room. "We are glad that honorable sun most kindly shines upon this great day of dolls." Mrs. Tanako pushed back the sliding walls and let the sunshine and the playful breezes of March pour into the room.

"Now may we have the beautiful steps!" Hanako asked after she had eaten her breakfast. She watched eagerly as her mother took out of a big chest five steps covered with red silk. At the top of the steps she placed a dazzling golden screen.

"Here come most honorable emperor and empress," said Hanako, taking two dolls from her mother's hand.

Hanako placed each royal doll on the top step in front of the golden screen.

"Next come the ladies-in-waiting," said Hanako. She arranged the three dolls in their bright kimonos on the step below the royal family.

"Here are the orange and cherry trees which are like the trees at the gate of the royal palace," said her mother.

Hanako put the gay little trees at each end of the third step, with a royal sentinel beside them. In between them she placed the court musicians who were seated cross-legged on soft cushions.

"Now we prepare the fourth step," counted Hanako with a happy smile. For a whole year she had waited, for see again all these beautiful dolls, for these were the special dolls which were used only on the day of the Doll Festival, when every little Japanese girl had a holiday.

Later the boys would have their holiday, when queer paper fishes would fly from tall poles and the boys would fly kites and have kite races.

"We now greet the three coolie dolls," said Hanako as she placed them on the fourth step. They were dressed in plainer clothes and carried brooms and brushes to show that they did the household work. Then came a little platform holding some doll actors who were giving a play.

At dinner time there was company and Mrs. Tanako's little maid servant and her three little maid servants to put heaped trays with good things to put before the guests. There were hot and cold soups which every one drank, and blue and white bowls full of rice. There was golden brown fish served with preserved apricots, green chrysanthemum leaves in yellow batter, and bamboo shoots and mushrooms dipped in custard, and of course every one used chopsticks.

After dinner Hanako went visiting other little girls all up and down the street, and she carried gifts for them in her kimono sleeves.

"Alas, the smiling sun is going far away," said Hanako, as the third day of March ended. "The most beautiful dolls must go again into the big chest. Of all Doll Festivals this has been best." She cuddled down into her quilts.

How to Build Your Fortress

1. A soft wood box about 19 inches by 13 inches is used for the main part, and a similar one is cut up for the turrets at the four corners.

2. Tools you will need are: a coping saw, chisels, a small cross-cut saw, plane, hammer, assorted nails, sharp knife, a pencil and ruler.

3. Pieces are cut in the parapet with coping saw and knife and are 1 inch long and 3/4 inch high.

4. The platforms inside turrets, for soldiers to stand on, are 2 inches down from the top. Small ladders can reach from the floor to platforms.

5. Two doors, each 2 inches wide by 4 inches high, are placed on hinges and open inward.

6. The drawbridge can be made of several pieces of wood called slats, and can have small chains (obtained at ten-cent stores) to raise and lower it.

7. The fortress should be painted a gray color.

If you want candles to last half as long again as usual, try the following plan: Take each candle by the wick and give it a good coating of white varnish. Then put the candles away for a day or two to harden. The varnish prevents the grease from running down, and so preserves the life of the candle.

If the surface of your stove looks rough, it is probably due to an accumulation of stove blacking. Sandpaper rubbed over the surface will make it as smooth as when new.

DRABNESS THAT LIES WITHIN

By FANNIE HURST

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.) (WNU Service.)

THERE is an all too large proportion of human beings who lead a dull business.

Certain definite conditions of our civilization contribute to that pathetic end and help bring about the sin and the shame of it. Life, so short at its best, should be, if the list of god-of-things-as-they-ought-to-be is all merciful, an interval crowded with light. But we go ahead and cram man into the sometimes too tightly fitting shoe of civilization, to routine work, stultify his imagination by crucifying him on the cross of day-by-day stark reality and un- less the individual develops the power and glory of resistance to mere external, the result is dangerously apt to be drab.

Nor is this quality of drabness necessarily confined to special social planes. It can hang in a pall over the rich and poor alike. Conspire as the rich and poor conditions of society all these eternal conditions of life within, against a matter which lies within doubtfully a matter which will succumb to his power whether he will succumb or resist the deadliness of finding life or drab.

As a matter of fact, even though so many of our lives seem tinned and classified, the way out is via the intellect, more than through release from routine. But the difficulty lies in its obviousness.

There is a certain experiment which is commonly practiced on college classes in psychology. The professor holds up a chart containing various pictures, sentences, figures, objects, characters and colors. The class is permitted to gaze upon the chart for the period of a moment or two and at the end of that time each member recites what he has seen.

The almost invariable result is a fine commentary upon the varying degree of thoroughness with which individuals observe. The majority of the class usually observes minimum. Some few have been alert to most of the objects, colors and characters, but only a select minority really sees in detail and with power of observation the contents of the chart.

Life can be drab because most of us are so busy missing the most of it, the aspect of it that is free for all. The adventure of the adventure that lies in our reach; the excitement of curiosity. The desire to know. Intellectual curiosity, meaning the desire and the vitality and the interest to delve into every minute aspect of life that presents itself, is the gateway to experience. Practically all the great figures of history have been blessed with it. To Caesars, Napoleons, Roosevelts, life cannot be commonplace, because so little appears to them as commonplace. Vigorous, seeking minds are not easily bored.

It is fair to assume that just as much of life is lying about us in our daily routine, as there is compressed between the leaves of books. Anyway it is worth seeking, and the way to seek is to take nothing for granted.

A subway jam contains enough of the possibility of adventure to blow up New York harbor. Scratch the surface of your desk neighbor and you will find the mystery of a pulsating, desiring, planning, scheming human being. Intellectual curiosity about people, places, street scenes, books, and above all, the desire to study and know the people who happen to be inhabiting this planet called earth, during your same interval here, simply will not permit life to become drab.

That must be why the sort of human beings in whom you are impelled to confide your difficulties, problems, amours, seem always so filled with a certain power and strength. They are interested in people. They command confidence by wanting it. Nobody is just a person. Men and women are people! Exciting, problematic, subtle, dangerous, appealing, provocative, magnetic, repellent, alluring and human. And in the midst of this melee of the excitement of being human among humans, each of us is privileged to live his life. Just around the corner is no more to me, than it is to you. The unknown lurks there for one and for all. Intellectual curiosity is a magic carpet which can whisk you out of yourself, and yet how appalling, when one stops to consider, the lot of so many. The books that are never opened. The confidences that are never given or received. The friendships that are never made because two particular human beings

He gained one advantage, though, in making a light and having a look at it. He got out his cigarette lighter and struck a light. There were small pieces of electrical apparatus screwed to the wall above the electric buzzer, and this, as he thought about it, seemed rather queer. It wasn't the other way around—the push button on this side and the buzzer in Forster's apartment? Why should anyone already in the apartment have to ring a door bell to get into this office? The door was locked against the office and into the apartment. Well then, it wasn't a door bell.

Of course it wasn't. It was a signal, and once it sounded in the stenographer's room it seemed a reasonable inference that it was Forster's way of summoning a stenographer. But what good was it to buzz for her if she couldn't get through the door? She had the door left unlocked during office hours? No, Forster would want to feel better guarded against intrusion than that.

Martin held up the lighter again in an attempt to identify the other thing. He had a hunch that it would be worth looking into. He'd have to have something to stand on, though. The ledge of the door was two feet above his head. The top step wasn't wide enough to balance a chair on, but one of those big steel waste-paper baskets down in the stenographer's room would probably hold him up, and would just about give him the added height he needed. He brought one of them up and tried it. It was going to be a pretty precarious perch and the easy possibility of his falling the whole length of the flight with the basket on top of him wasn't a pleasant one. Well, there was no use thinking about things like that. He'd got to have a look at the little sheet iron box that was screwed to the wall beside the buzzer.

He got out his penknife and dropped it open. Into the side pocket of his coat it and the cigarette lighter were all he had by way of tools. Then, putting one foot on the rim of the basket he made a sort of spring and clutched the top of the door frame. He found he could hold himself with one hand, so he got out his cigarette lighter, lit it and stood it on the ledge made by the door frame.

He recognized the little sheet iron box now. It was a transformer such as he had when he was a small boy to run his electric train with. The present house current came into one side of it from a steel cable. A pair of low voltage wires went out the other side, connecting with the buzzer, and also going down through a hole in the door frame. Well, he understood it now. The door was held by a wire catch such as they use for rear vestibule doors of apartment houses. A button, probably on Forster's desk, sounded the buzzer and at the same time released the catch. The stenographer had to get to the door before Forster took his finger off the button.

What afforded Martin a broad grin was the thought of Forster's precious security being betrayed by the careless electrician who had put the transformer outside the locked door instead of in. All Martin had to do was to scrape the insulation off the wires and use the circuit and the door would be unlocked.

Wait a minute, though. He'd have disconnected the buzzer first. He'd nearly forgotten that, and he turned for an instant at the narrowness of his escape. But two minutes' work with his penknife sufficed to accomplish his purpose. As he twisted the two bare ends of the wire into contact he heard a sharp click which announced that the door was unlocked. He sprang down from the basket and opened the door. Luck was still with him. There was no one on the other side. The whole corridor was deserted.

For a moment after he'd closed the door he stood still and listened. He heard a man's voice, momentarily raised in anger; not an old man's voice and not Conley's voice, yet again one that he somehow felt that he should remember. It guided him down the short transverse corridor and to the left down a longer one until it brought him to a hall outside a door. At that point the words became distinguishable and the voice identified itself at the same time.

"right," she said, "I think I'll just let him know I'm here and see what he does about it. You see, you really are too much of a fool."

Max closed the door. He was ready to say something, but Martin spoke first.

"I've come up here to get Miss Rhoda White," he said. "It will save time and argument if you will take me to her."

"You're too late for her," Max answered. "She was here but she's gone away. I saw her out myself. Did you think that was what I had for you? Well, it isn't. It's something else. You'll save yourself the worst of it if you'll hand over what you and that other girl stole from me this afternoon. I mean a railroad ticket and a trunk check. Come across now! Quick!"

Martin had a sudden realization of his folly in coming into Max's presence with the ticket and the receipt for Rhoda's trunk upon his person. There was no misunderstanding what Max meant to do.

Martin, who was no boxer, and indeed no physical match on any terms for his antagonist, tried to slip around him and get to the door. But Max was quicker than he was and he met his rush with a blow on the jaw that was like the kick of a mule. A crashing sound accompanied by a brilliant display of lights was the last thing Martin was conscious of for several minutes.

The next thing was a stream of cold air and wetness and a pair of light hands exploring beneath his unbuttoned coat. He did not remember Rhoda's trunk check and ticket, that Max had said he meant to get, but all the same he tried to push the hands away. Even as he did so the fog lifted enough for him to realize that they were a girl's hands and that they weren't picking his pockets.

The shaky voice that said, "It's all right, lie still," sounded like Rhoda's and the face he giddily saw bending over him looked like Rhoda's. It couldn't be, could it? What would she be doing here? Where was this, anyhow? And why was his head drenched with water? It was Rhoda. She was getting clearer every minute.

"It really is you, isn't it?" he said. "She nodded and said, 'Don't talk, lie still.'"

As his vision cleared and things got less swimmy he saw that she'd been crying, and the shock of that discovery lifted the fog from his memory. This was the room where he'd encountered Max Lewis.

"What's he been doing to you?" he asked.

"Max? Nothing. He didn't know I was here. He thought I'd gone, just as he told you."

"But you must have been here to have heard him tell me so."

"I was in that room in the dark. Claire was in here waiting for him, but she didn't see me when I came in. I heard all he and Claire said while they were quarreling. But they were both so angry, each with the other, that I could hardly tell what it was about."

Rhoda and a growled "What the devil!" in a man's voice. Conley's closet light came on overhead.

"So this is where you've got to, is it?" Conley said. "I had an idea you were still on the premises. Well, the old man will be glad we haven't lost you. Come out of there!"

At that Martin shifted his grip on the cane, noting as he did that its rubber shod ferrule was heavily dented and kicked shut the closet door with a slam.

The unexpected and unaccountable sound of that door slammed to behind him must have frozen Conley for an instant, for he and Rhoda presented, as Martin first saw them, the effect of a tableau vivant. Rhoda backed that against the wall—only was it a wall or was that middle panel in it a door—Conley gripping her by one arm in the midst of his arrested attempt to haul her away. The next instant he turned, saw Martin and jumped for him.

Martin, who had already shortened his grip on the cane, knowing that he wouldn't have room in that closet for a full swing, met the rush with a backhand stroke at the side of his assailant's head. Thanks to the thick rubber cap with which the ferrule was shod the impact was practically noiseless, but the big detective wilted and went down under it like a stock yard steer under the maul.

Rhoda and Martin gazed at each other aghast across him.

"It's all right," Martin said. "It's just another knockout, I guess. I must have caught him on the jaw, too. He'll start coming to in a minute and then we can beat it out of here."

"When he opened the door," Rhoda said, "he was coming straight toward me as if he knew I'd be standing right here. But he didn't know, because he jumped when he saw me. Martin, I can't stand it like this. Let's do something. Can't we open the door?"

He didn't answer instantly, or move. He was looking at the outlined panel in what appeared to be the wall behind her. She swayed slightly and caught for support at the nearest of the clothes hooks; then uttered a cry of astonishment as she started to fall, not forward but back. The thing she was leaning against was a door and it was swinging open behind her.

Martin sprang over Conley and caught her. Without a word the two of them stood staring into the strange little chamber which the opened door revealed, staring and drawing deep breaths of an air that seemed, after the overwhelming stuffiness of the closet, fresh and cool.

The place was oddly furnished, in a manner that suggested a stage set. It comprised one solid-looking black oak, leather-seated chair in the mission style, more or less, a small square oak stool that evidently served the occupant to put his feet on, an oak table with a telephone on the back, a cradle type on it, and an ash-tray, a prosaic arch, which wasn't an arch but an oblong opening, didn't come clear to the floor of the stage. It stopped thirty inches above it, and it was an opening since it was filled by an enormous sheet of plate glass.

Rhoda, to Martin's consternation, said after she'd stood staring at it beside him for a minute, "I know what this is," and walked boldly up the three steps onto the stage beckoning him imperatively to come.

The man she was gazing at—an old bird whom Martin instantly recognized as the man he'd had a glimpse of in the limousine that morning, was sitting sideways to his desk in a high-backed, leather-cushioned, swivel chair, smoking what was probably an after-dinner cigar and reading a document of some sort which he was holding in both hands.

plates of glass. You could see it was painted since it wasn't equally transparent all over, and the strong cross-lighting from just above the frame, which accounted no doubt for the curious filtered look of the light in the observation post, would be enough to prevent anything being seen through it, unless there was a light back here.

He checked his impulse to ask Rhoda what she'd been doing for hours and hours in the room they were looking into and what she meant by saying that Conley had always come in at the right time. What his mind fastened upon was her conclusion that Forster's bodyguard, stationed here where his eye could command the whole room, was not able to hear what the actors in the scenes he watched were saying. If that were true the converse was probably true also, that Forster wouldn't be able to hear any ordinary sounds. "He must be a thorough old rabbit of a rascal," he remarked, rather low but in his natural voice.

Rhoda was rather startled at this and admonished him to be careful, but she smiled in agreement with his characterization of Forster. And when she saw that Martin's voice hadn't reached the old man's ears, she said in a tone that matched his, "He thought for a minute this afternoon that I'd come up to shoot him; made me take my hands out of my pockets. And Conley was in the room through that little door down there almost before I'd had time to do it. Only I don't see," she added, "why he wouldn't want him to listen as well as look."

"I think I do," Martin told her. "The poor old goat lives in terror of physical violence, you see. I imagine he's something of a crook. He must have to have lots of talks with people he's afraid to be left alone with. Well, a spy who could hear everything they said would have pretty good hold on the old man if ever he wanted to use it. Blackmail, don't you see? But he can watch from up here, ready to come in if he sees anybody make a pass at him, without ever knowing what it's all about."

Forster startled them both by a swift glance straight in their direction and a perceptible motion of the head that must have some sort of signal. They both started back precipitately, and Rhoda collided with the table, which moved with a protesting grunt much louder than their voices had been.

"It's all right," Rhoda said, "he didn't hear."

"We'll soon hear something, though," Martin said very quietly in her ear. "Conley will be coming to, down there in the closet. We'd better beat it out of here while we have a chance."

He was at the foot of the little flight of stairs before he realized she wasn't following. Conley was by now well along the road to recovering consciousness. In another minute he might again be formidable. Turning back impatiently to learn why Rhoda didn't come, he saw her gazing out through the glass with the utmost intently, bright-eyed with excitement, utterly oblivious to their pressing need for haste.

"Hurry!" he called. "It will be too late if you don't."

She answered without turning her eyes away from whatever she was gazing at in the room. "I can't. Something's happening that I've got to watch. Claire Cleveland's in there with him."

If Martin could have been sure that he dared leave the prostrate detective alone long enough to dash back, pick Rhoda up and carry her out by force, he would probably have done it. He'd have liked to do it. He was furious with her just then. But already Conley had rolled over prone and was trying to get to his feet. Martin had just time to bestir him and from hard with both knees on the small of the man's back. In almost the same instant he snatched his wrists and pulled around so that they crossed behind his back. Conley's head hit the edge of the step pretty hard, and he went limp once more.

"I've got him now," Martin called to Rhoda. "Only for heaven's sake come along."

"I can't," she answered. Incredibly in the next breath she added, "I wish you wouldn't keep talking to me."

If she wouldn't come along he must manage to find out what she was doing up there. Some vague memory, probably of the movies, suggested an expedient. Holding the crossed wrists with one hand he unbuckled the man's trousers belt with the other, pulled it through the loops and managed, after a little experimenting, to bind Conley's arms together in a way that he thought would hold.

He was about to leave him thus when a faint groan suggested another necessity, and simultaneously the slight of a white silk muffler dangling from the pocket of one of the overcoats hanging in the closet suggested the means of serving it. He'd never gagged anybody before and wasn't quite sure how it was done, but he succeeded in getting several folds of the thick silk between the relaxed jaws, and tied the ends tight at the back of the man's neck. Then he sprang up the steps to Rhoda and stood beside her, looking out through the glass at the scene she was so absorbed in watching.

SAW 'EM FIRST

A man employed in the city recently moved with his family to the country. One morning he had a telephone call from his wife telling him to hurry home with an extra bottle of milk.

The vexed husband said: "I'm terribly busy; what's the rush?"

"The children and I saw a black cat with white spots and the darlings kittens to match run under the barn, and we want to coax them to the house."

"I smelled that family last night. They are skunks. No feed from me," he said.

Birds Pay Tribute to Singer's Golden Voice

Ninon Vallin, the French operatic star, is a woman St. Francis, one of her most regular and devoted audiences consisting of hundreds of small birds which come flying to the window of her home in France as soon as she starts singing. They perch on the window-sills and even on the piano until she stops. "I have always adored birds," she explained, in very broken English, to a reporter. "When I was little I had a lot of them in cages, but my father hated to see them in captivity. So he let them out in the garden, but instead of flying away, they stayed and used to swarm round me whenever I started to sing." Asked how she first started her career, Madame Vallin replied smilingly, "In church. Some influential people had heard my voice in church, and insisted on my trying first in Lyons, then in Paris, with the result that after singing at a charity performance Da Costa heard me and immediately booked me for a huge tour in South America. Since then," she added laughing, "I have never stopped singing."

All Sorts of Pictures Popular With Eskimos

Newspapers with colored comics, catalogues, illustrated travel magazines and juvenile picture books are popular with Eskimos, both adult and youth, at Point Barrow, Alaska. Many fur traders win the good will of famous hunters and possessors of good furs by gifts of catalogues picturing guns, power boats, tents and such outdoor items. The women are equally interested in the large mail order dry goods and household goods catalogues. Teachers in government schools take advantage of this love for pictures in the Eskimos in teaching them to read. The natives bring a postmaster a catalogue and some money, asking him to send away for the item at the end of the stubby, greasy finger. Considerable mail order, parcel post business is conducted in this manner with business firms in Pacific cities.

The most striking fine car types ever offered at such low prices are now being presented by Ford dealers. These are the six newest de luxe creations of the Ford Motor Company. They are designed and built to meet every need of the automobile buyer whose desire for motoring luxury and outstanding performance is tempered with sound economy.

Get the facts about these fine cars. Compare their lithe, clean-cut style with any you have ever created in your own imagination. Learn about the de luxe materials with which each car is trimmed and upholstered, and how carefully these are tailored.
