"All right," he said. "I was just going off duty. The station house is a block from here and if you will drive around there until I change into my street clothes I'll come out, get that drink and we'll call it square,"

So the woman drove around and waited outside. In a few minutes the cop came out. He was a very presentable young chap and the woman took him to the speakensy, bought him a drink and asked him a lot of things about police work. He talked so well that she was astonished when she suddenly looked at her watch.

"I am an hour late for dinner," she said, "and I haven't an excuse in the world. Now you will have to arrest me." The cop finally agreed to go home with her and pretend that he had arrested her but she insisted that he must be in uniform. So they went back to the station house where he changed again and got his motorcycle. Then they went to the woman's home.

There she announced to her husband, who was waiting in some anxiety, that she was under arrest for a traffic violation. He asked the cop to come into the house.

"Can't we square this thing?" he inquired, "At least, let's have a drink and talk it over." So they talked it over and the officer finally said it would be all right to let the woman off with a warning, if she would be careful about traffic rules thereafter. Finally, he looked at his watch.

"My heavens!" he exclaimed, start ing for the door. "How am I ever going to explain this to my wife? And I don't know how he did. (@ 1921 Bell Syndicate.) - WNU Service.

Town Wants to Dodge

Onus of Kid's Name Silver City, N. M .- Silver City wants to shake off its reputation as being the home of Billy the Kid, notorious Southwest desperado.

Billy was only a village bad boy here; he spilled no blood in his home town, the Silver City Independent avers. Billy merely broke into a Chinese laundry one Saturday night; was arrested, placed in jail, climbed out of the chimney and escaped. Billy never returned to Silver City after that, the Independent claims.

To Rule With a Rod of Iron

TT DOES not require a large degree I of erudition to understand that the expression "to rule with a rod of iron" is a reference to discipline or government which is extremely strict.

The phrase has been in our own and other languages for so long that the memory of man "knoweth not to the contrary," originating undoubtedly in the days when the subjects of rulers were indeed subjects-in every sense of the word.

The work, however, that is responsible for the widespread use of this line in the English language is none other than the Bible, where it appears in several places.

We find it for instance in Psalms "Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron." And in Revelation, 2:27: "And he shall rule them with a rod of iron." (@ 1931 Bell Syndicate.) - WNU Service.

Together the two women, tight lipped, condemnatory, watched the gay parade of Dixie Lee's girls go by-

The flashing company disappeared. A whiff of patchoull floated back to the two women standing by the open window. Their postrils lifted in disdain. The sound of the horses' hoofs grew fainter.

"It's a disgrace to the community"-Mrs. Wyatt's voice took on its platform note-"and an insult to every wife and mother in the territory. There ought to be a law."

Sabra turned away from the window. Her eyes sought the orderly rows of books, bound neatly in tan and red-Tancey's law books, so long unused now, except, perhaps, for occasional newspaper reference. Her face set Itself in lines of resolve. "Perhaps there is."

A man like Yancey Cravat-spectacular, dramatic, impulsive-has a thousand critics, scores of bitter enemies. As the weeks had gone by and Yancey failed to return-had failed to write-rumor, clouded by scandal, leaped like prairie fire from house to house in Osage, from town to town in the Oklahoma country, over the Southwest, indeed. All the old stories were revived, and their ugly red tongues licked a sordid path through the newly opened land.

They say he killed a man in the Cherokee Strip Run and was caught by a posse and hung.

They say he got a section of land, sold it at a high figure, and was seen lording it around the bar of the Brown Palace hotel in Denver, in his white sombrero and his Prince Albert coat.

They say Dixie Lee is his real wife, and he left her when she was seventeen, came to Wichita, and married Sabra Venable; and he is the one who has set Dixie up in the brick house.

They say he drank five quarts of whisky one night and died and is buried in an unmarked grave in Horseshoe ranch, where the Doolin gang held forth.

They say he is really the leader of the Doolin gang. They say. They say. They say.

It is impossible to know how Sabra survived those first terrible weeks that lengthened into months that lengthened into years. There was in her the wiry endurance of the French Marcys; the pride of the southern Venables. She told herself that Yancey was dead. She told the world that he was dead. She knew, by some deep and unerring instinct, that he was alive. She ran the paper competently; wrung from it a decent livelihood for herself and the two children. When it had no longer been possible to keep secret from her parents the fact of Yancey's prolonged absence, Felice Venuble had descended upon her prepared to gather to the family bosom her deserted child and to bring her, together with her offspring, back to the parental home. Lewis Venable had been too frall and ill to accompuny his wife, so Felice had brought with her the more imposing among the Venables, Goforths, and Vians who chanced to be visiting the Wichita house at the time of her departure, Orage had looked upon these stately figures with much awe, but Sabra's reception of them had been as coolly cordial as her rejection of their plans for her future was firm.

"I intend to stny right here in Osage," she announced, quietly, but in negro boy she cowered, afraid even a tone that even Felice Venable recognized as inflexible, "and run the berself and her thriving business | paper, and bring up my children as | boy was so dreadful, so remorseless | first brick of the truth of the course to best brick structure in the wooden | their father would have expected them | that when the truth of it came to a square, solld, and imposing to be brought up. "Oh-I will be very rich, and you will be very famous. And Yancey-' "Yancey!" The word was wrenched from her like a cry. "They will tell stories about Yancev until he will grow into a legend. He will be part of the history of the Southwest. They will remember him and write about him when all these mealy-faced governors are dead and gone and forgotten. They will tell the little children about him, and they will dispute about him-he did this, he did that; he was like this, he was like that. You will see."

Sabra thought of her own children, who knew so little of their father. Donna, a thin secretive child of almost seven now, with dark, straight black hair and a sallow skin like Yancey's; Cim, almost thirteen, moody, charming, imaginative. Donna was more like her grandmother Felice Venable than her own mother; Cim resembled Yancey so strongly in mood, manner, and emotions as to have almost no trace of Sabra. She wondered, with a pang, if she had failed to impress herself on them because of her absorption in the town, in the newspaper, in the resolve to succeed. She got out a photograph of Yancey that she had hidden away because to see it was to feel a stab of pain, and had it framed, and hung it on the wall where the children could see it

"Your father-" Sabra would begin, courageously, resolved to make him live again in the minds of the children. Donna was not especially interested. Cim said, "I know it," and capped her story with a tale of his own in which Yancey's feat of derring-do outrivaled any swashbuckling escapade of D'Artagnan.

"Oh, but Cim, that's not true! You mustn't believe stories like that about your father." "It is true. Isaiah told me. I guess he ought to know." And then the question she dreaded. "When are Isalah and father coming back?" She could answer, somehow, evasive-ly, about Yancey, for her instinct concerning him was sure and strong. But at the fate that had overtaken the thing that had happened to the black convention that she had built up about her turning to ashes under the sudden flaring fire of hidden savagery. She tried never to think of it, but sometimes, at night, the hideous thing took possession of her, and she was swept by such horror that she crouched descriptions of social events fully there under the bedclothes, clammy of it? Sabra, passing from the kitchen to the girl's bedroom with hot water, cloths, blankets, saw Isalah crouched in a corner by the wood box. He looked up at her mutely. His face was a curious ash gray. As Sabra looked at him she knew.

The child was a boy. His hair was coarse and kinky. His nose was wide. His lips were thick. He was a negro child. Doctor Valliant looked at him as Sabra held the writhing red-purple bundle in her arms.

"This is a bad business." "I'll send for her parents. I'll speak to Isaiah. They can marry." "Marry! Don't you know?"

Something in his voice startled her. "What?" "The Osages don't marry negroes.

It's forbidden." "Why, lots of them have. You see negroes who are Indians every day. On the street."

"Not Osages, Seminoles, yes. And Creeks, and Choctaws, and even Chickasaws. But the Osages, except for intermarriage with whites, have kept the tribe pure." This information seemed to Sapra to be unimportant and slightly silly, Purity of the tribe, indeed! Osages! She resolved to be matter of fact and sensible now that the shocking event was at hand, waiting to be dealt with. She herself felt guilty, for this thing had happened in her own house. She should have foreseen danger and avoided it. Isaiah had been a faithful black child in her mind, whereas he was, in reality, a man grown.

Doctor Valliant had finished his work. The girl lay on the bed, her dull black eyes fixed on them; silent, watchful, hopeless. Isaiah crouched in the kitchen. The child lay now in Sabra's arms. Donna and Cim were, fortunately, asleep, for it was now long past midnight. The tense excitement past, the whole affair seemed to Sabra sordid, dreadful. What would the town say? What would the members of the Philomathean club and the Twentieth Century Culture club think? Doctor Valliant came over to her and looked down at the queer shriveled morsel in her arms. "We must let his father see him."

Sabra shrank. "Oh, no!" He took the baby from her and turned toward the kitchen. "I'll do it. Let me have a drink of whisky, will you, Sabra? I'm dead tired." She went past him into the dining room, without a glance at the negro boy cowering in the kitchen. Doctor Valliant followed her. As she poured a drink of Yancey's store of whisky, almost untouched since he had left, she heard Valliant's voice, very gentle, and then the sound of Isalah's blubbering. wet, with agony. It was the agony which only one kind of pain can bring Fur Adds Chic to Fall Costumes

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

TO SAY that this or that coat or sult or frock is "trimmed in fur" does not begin to convey the Idea of the novelty and intriguing detail which distinguishes the furtrimmed costumes such as are the rage for fall. The artfulness with which fur is being manipulated in a trimming way baffles description.

No doubt designers are encouraged 1 to display a fascinating originality in their working of fur in that the new pelts, specially the modish flat types. are so supple and fabriclike they can be handled as easily and successfully as any material.

Among smart fashions there is none smarter for autumn wear than the suit or coat made of one of the new woolen weaves or of flattering velvet, the same embellished with Persian lamb or astrokhan or any fur of that type. The distinguishing note about these costumes is the unique treatment of the fur which so individualizes them from the ordinary. There is nothing conventional about the new fur trimmings, the whole tendency being to achieve the unique and the highly decorative. This is instanced to no little degree in the handsome coat illustrated below to the right in the accompanying picture. This patrician model is fashioned of super quality black velvet, and we pause here a say a word in regard to the tremendous vogue which is in promise for the tailored velvet coat or suit. For street wear as well as for evening velvet holds a conspicuous place in the mode. A very unusual and designful treatment of the Persian lamb which trims this coat emphasizes the new "little collar," the same developing into a semi-bodice effect which is belted and buckled most intriguingly. The hat is also of velvet, for the slogan, "the only hat to wear with a velvet suit, frock or coat is a velvet hat," is being generally adopted in fashion-right above in the picture is fashioned of a black pebbly wool weave. A clever two-in-one collar and yoke effect of elegant Persian lamb gives "class" to the jaunty little jacket. The scarftie of self-fabric also adds a touch that tells. The light sllk blouse with its pleated hemline lends charm to the costume. Brilliant wee ostrich tips surmount the crown of the fashionable Empress Eugenie chapeau which tops this stunning outfit.

With her black and white wool dress milady seated to the left wears a gray kid fur suede-sleeved jacket, which is the last word in swank as the fashionist now sees it. Her Empress Eugenie hat is of black felt, feathered with a cluster of sprightly quills.

Not only suits and coats, but frocks of wool, silk or velvet will carry ornate "dressmaker touches" of fur. Perhaps it will be but a bow or two of thin fur or that which is very new, the edges of jacket, blouse and skirt hemline bound with astrakhan or seal. Then, too, little shoulder capes of fur are heralded for fall and winter-beret and scarf set also, if you please, the scarf bearing an amusing resemblance to the quaint little "tippet" which is a word lately revived. That a most interesting program is planned for furs and fur treatments there is no doubt, and the most or-| nate and unusual, the more do they ment which adorns it, for this is a fa- meet with fashion's favor.

HUGE TASK IN DROUGHT

"The year of the great drought," will be known to future generations, wrought great damage to millions. several million persons of food, but the drought disaster continued in the summer of 1931 in the northwestern states, and also brought other minor catastrophes in its wake, such as for-

in that time more than 2,750,000 persons were given food, clothing, medical aid, shelter or other type of as-In a description of grades recently sistance. Today, still as a result of the drought, the Red Cross is giving extended relief in parts of North Dakota, Washington and Montana, where resources of hundreds of families were wiped out this past summer, when a second and more severe spell of dry weather was prolonged in that region.

This drought relief presented the greatest task that has ever been undertaken by the Red Cross as a peacetime activity. The Mississippi Valley flood of 1927, while more spectacular, and calling for relief of a costlier type, because homes and possessions were swept away, affected hardly one-fourth the number of people who suffered because of the drought.

In addition to the broad program of drought relief still being carried on, John Barton Payne, chairman of the American Red Cross, has given the following suggestion to Chapter chairmen, in regard to unemployment relief: "Where there is suffering and want from any cause and the fundamental local needs are not being met, Chapters may participate in the community plans for meeting the need."

Some type of general family relief, whether for the drought victims, the unemployed or the war veteran and his family, were carried on by more than 3,000 Red Cross Chapters last

Ruby McKenzie, County Nurse, says, "The first permanent molars are they are sometimes referred to as the

Let us enumerate some of the duties that these teeth are called upon to any other teeth in the mouth; they assist in the proper growth and development of the lower jaw, as the subsequent permanent teeth erupt; they act their proper position; they maintain contact, one tooth with another, pretaining the proper facial contour. It might be of interest to the readers of this article to know that a large percentage of all jaws are deformed, and that many of these jaws are delife of the child, all of the other permanent teeth have not yet come into the dental arch.

If these teeth are lost in early childhood, the jaw will be underdeveloped, there will not be enough room for the teeth to erupt normally, with the result that they are going to push and crowd themselves into the arch in Mrs. Charley Norges spent Sunday spite of the fact that there is not sufficient space.

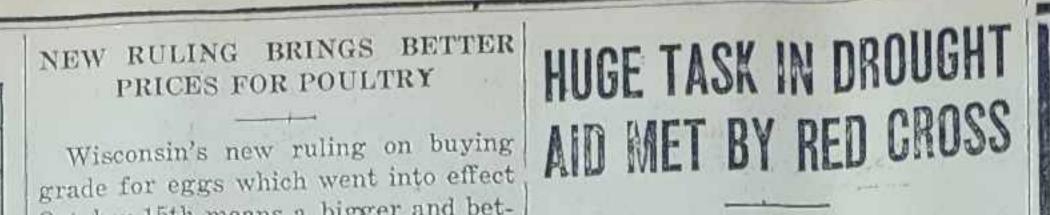

The upper jaw is brought into a new relationship with the lower jaw, the teeth being out of their proper positions, with a serious impairment of their masticating efficiency. An encouraging bit of information for parents is that children who have suitable quantities of milk, vegetables. Mrs. Jerome Schommer and daugh- coarse cereals, eggs and fruit will have little trouble with early decay of the sixth year molars.
