

ARTHUR W. SCHAEFER, MANAGING EDITOR OF THE STATESMAN PASSES AWAY

The Statesman suffered greatly when death last Saturday afternoon, Jan. 9th at 2:15 p. m. claimed Arthur W. Schaefer, co-publisher and managing editor. Mr. Schaefer's death came as a great shock to the entire community, as well as to the members of his family. Although he was not in the best of health for a few years, he was confined to his home only five days. His departure being hastened by a fall on an icy sidewalk Monday, Jan. 4, suffering internal injuries.

Deceased was born on Dec. 31, 1888 at Brothertown, Calumet county, Wis., attaining the age of 45 years, 9 days. When an infant of two weeks his mother passed away, after which he was brought to the home of his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Magritz, three miles southwest of the village, in the Town of Kewaskum. Here he was raised to manhood. He graduated from the Kewaskum High school, class of 1908, taught school for three years, then spent one year at Milwaukee. In 1910 he accepted a position in the Statesman office, spending the remainder of his life in said office. On Nov. 25, 1916, together with Don J. Barbeck, present co-publisher, purchased the Statesman from Geo. H. Schmidt. When the World war broke out Mr. Schaefer was included in the draft. Inducted into the service he was sent to Columbus, O., where he remained only a few days, being discharged on account of not passing the physical examination. His father, William Schaefer, preceded him in death Dec. 10, 1914. He is survived by one brother, Louis of Juneau and one sister, Mary, wife of William F. Schultz, proprietor of the Republican House. At the latter place the deceased made his home for the past 25 years.

Mr. Schaefer was a man who made friendly acquaintances with whomsoever he came in contact. He was well known and had a large circle of friends. He always had a pleasant word for everyone and wore a smile on his face. He was a man who never shirked his job, honest, lovable and kind to his brother and sister, a man of fine character and a true friend.

During his career, both in the employ and as co-publisher of the Statesman, he materially assisted in the building and keeping the paper up to the standard it maintains. He was very aggressive, both civically and socially, ready at all times to do his part in promoting every enterprise and improvement for the welfare of the community.

Deceased was manager of the Kewaskum Basketball club, coach of the girls' basketball team. He held membership in the West Bend Lodge 188, F. and A. M. and Darling Chapter 20, Royal Arch Masons, and Fond du Lac Commandery 5, Knights Templar of Fond du Lac, Modern Woodmen, G. U. G. Germania, Lions club, and American Legion, Post 384, all of Kewaskum.

Kewaskum and community paid a final tribute Tuesday afternoon when Mr. Schaefer was buried with military honors in the Ev. Peace congregation's cemetery. The Statesman office, of which he was so many years connected with, suspended business during the funeral.

More than 500 persons attended the services at 2 p. m. in the Ev. Peace church. An escort of ex-soldiers, Kewaskum post, American Legion, members of the Modern Woodmen, G. U. G. Germania societies of Kewaskum and members of the West Bend Lodge 188 Masons, accompanied the body from the home to the church, where Rev. J. C. Frohne preached the sermon.

At the cemetery the Masonic rites were conducted by Elmer Eberhardt, after which the firing squad of the Legion fired a volley over the grave. The ceremony was climaxed by the sounding of "Taps." Pallbearers were D. M. Rosenheimer, Carl Schaefer, Earl Skalisky, Otto E. Lay, Ervin Koch and John F. Schaefer, brother Masons.

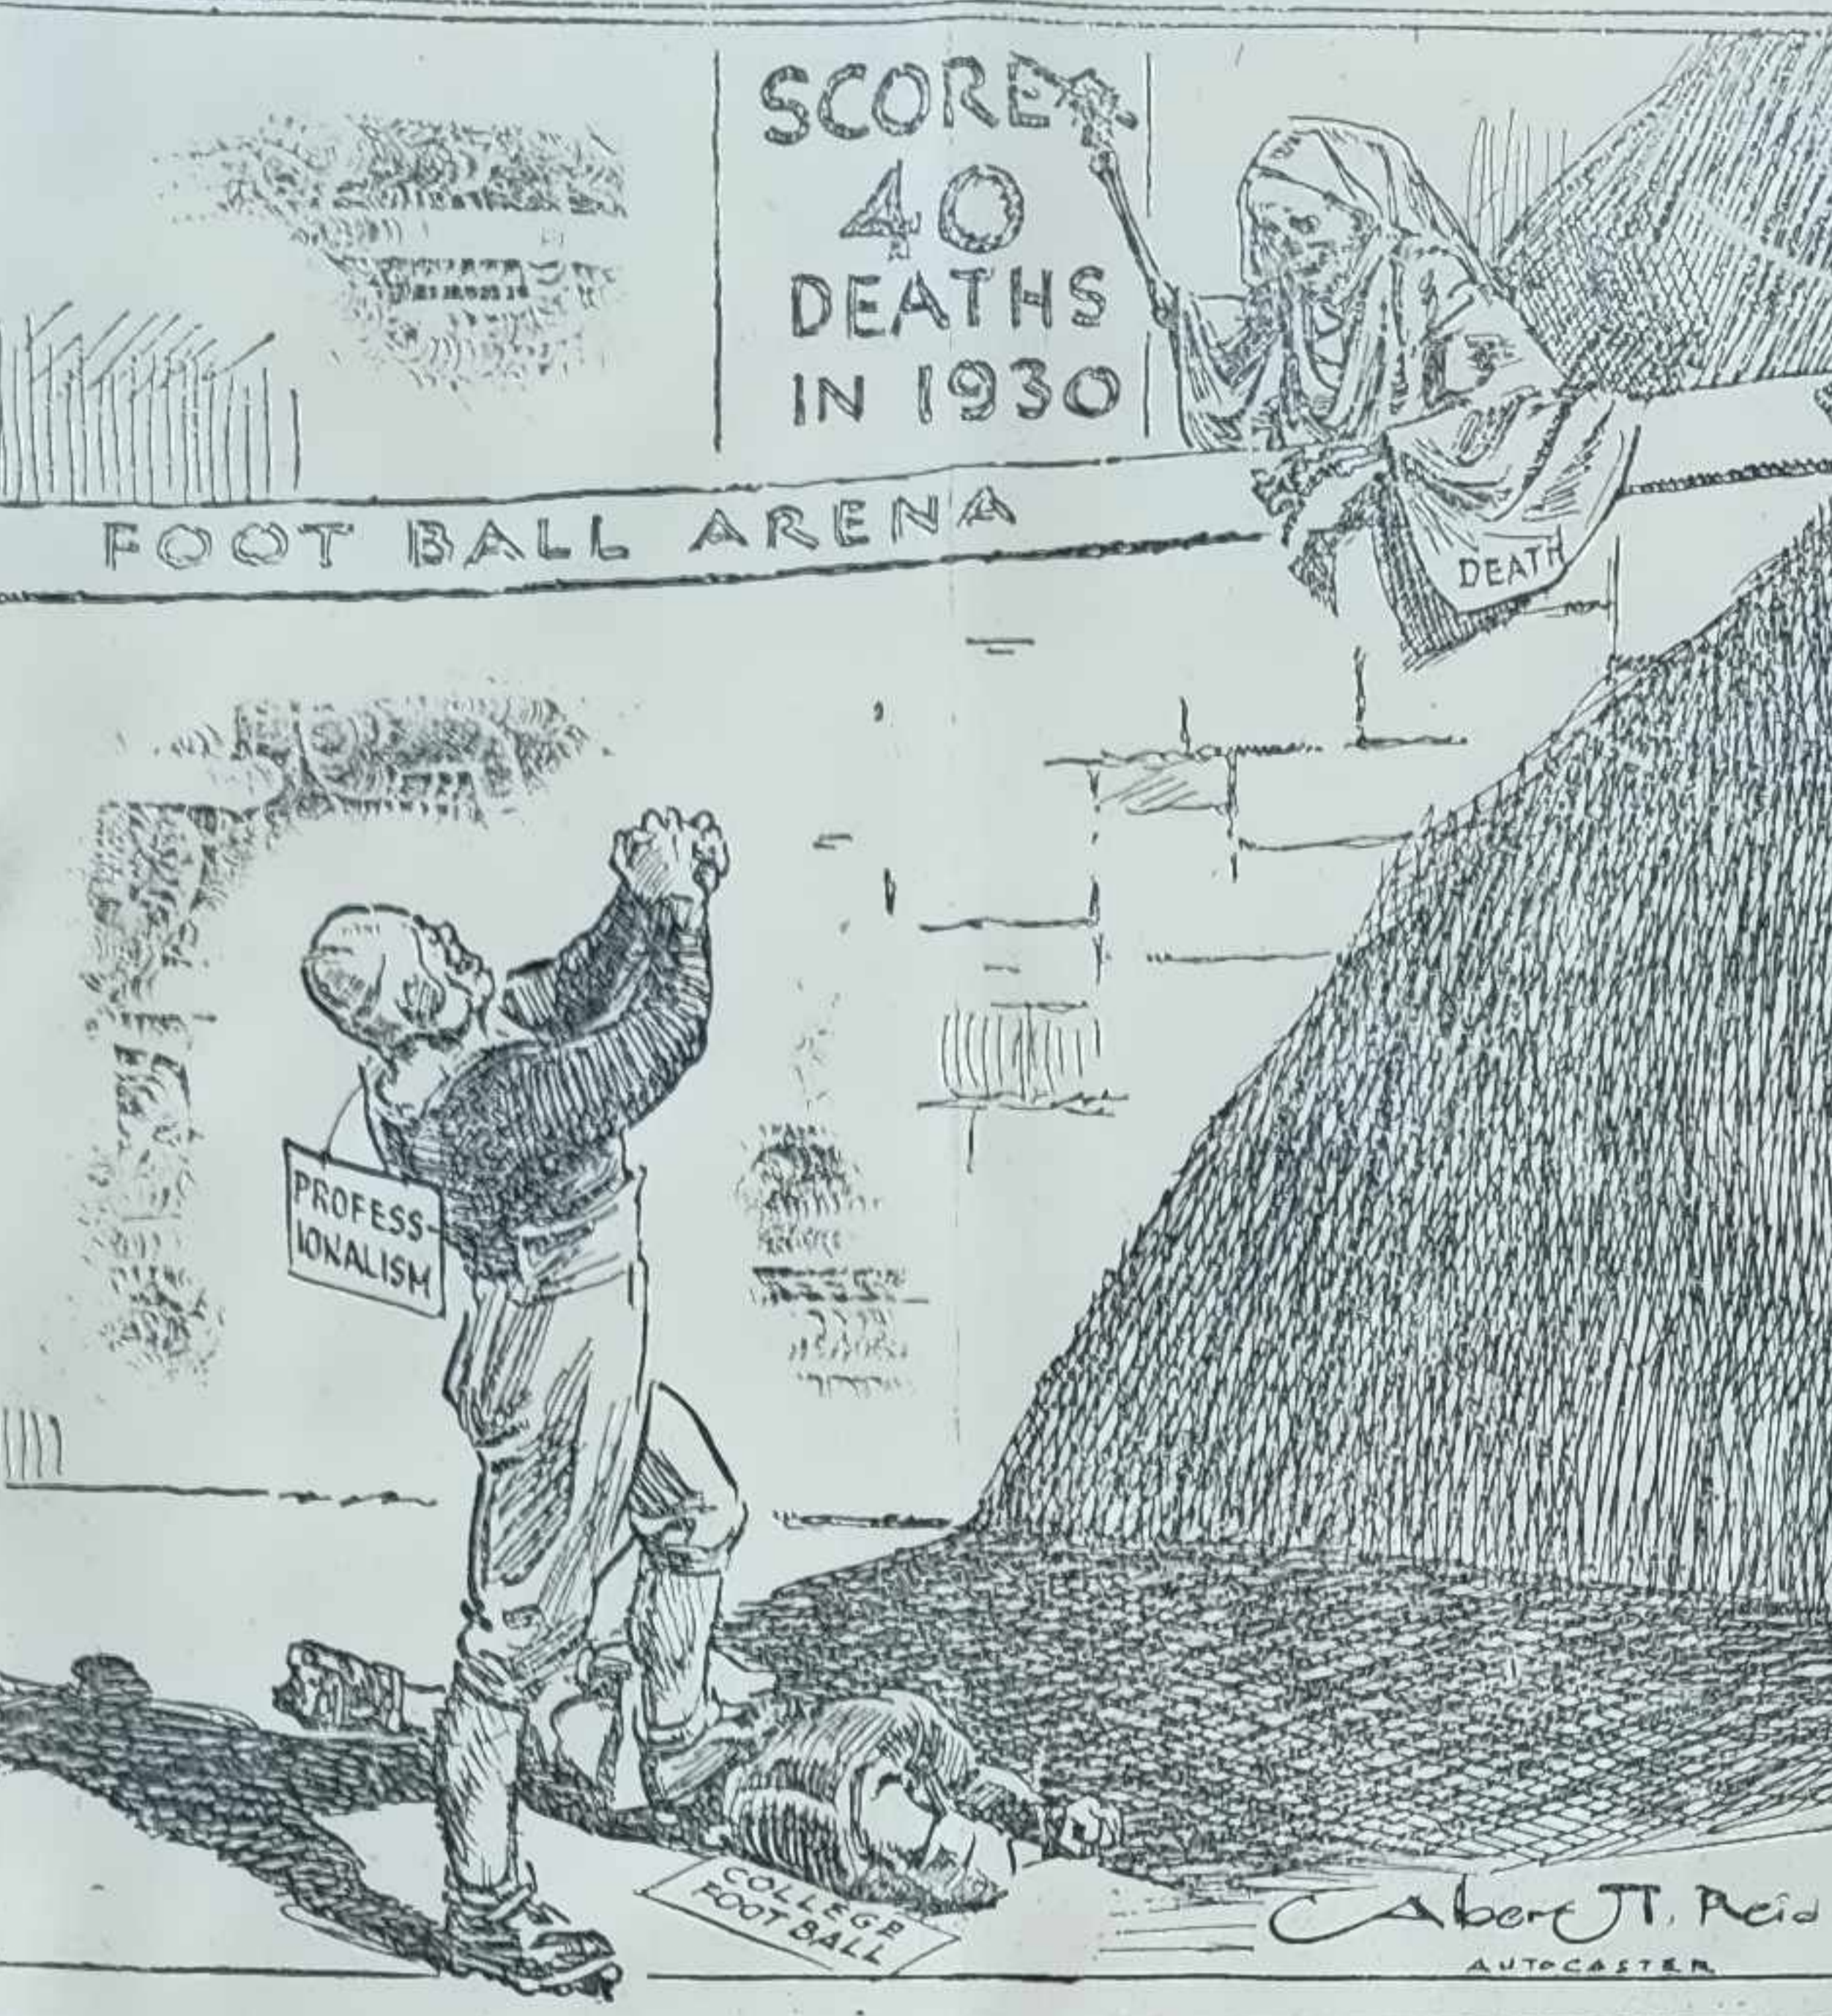

Among those from afar who attended the funeral were: Lawrence Boehm and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Fink, Kaukauna; Mr. and Mrs. Peter Mies, Mayville; Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Neumeier, LeRoy; Dr. Alton Altenhofen and Mrs. Emma Altenhofen, Wauwatosa; Mrs. Louis McEvoy, Messrs. and Mesdames Albert Schultz, August Hoffman and John Techtman, Mrs. Lena Magritz and daughter, Albert Stark, Albert Schaefer, Frank Strube, Leroy Strube, and Walter Schaefer, all of Milwaukee.

KEWASKUM CITY BASKET BALL TEAM KEEPS UP THEIR WINNING STREAK

WITTMAN WINS AIR RACES

KEWASKUM 18, WEST BEND 16. In an over-capacity house, the largest that ever witnessed a local basketball game, the local city team nosed out the strong West Bend city team at the high school gymnasium last Sunday evening. This was the first of a series of games for the championship of Washington county. The game was full of thrills throughout, the score being close at all times. The final result remaining in doubt until the final shot was fired.

Kewaskum started the scoring and held it until the end of the first half by a one-point score, 8-7. Only once during the game were the Benders able to jump into the lead and this was only for a few seconds.

The defense of both teams was excellent, preventing either side piling up a high score. As to stars each member of each team did their utmost. Special credit must be given to the guards on both teams. This was about the hardest fought game any guard could put up. Elliott of the locals greatly surprised the Benders by his work. He scored 13 of the 18 local points.

Fouls were numerous, the locals being penalized 10 times and the Benders 12 times. Kewaskum made seven field goals and four free throws, while the Benders caged six baskets and scored four free throws.

Warkey of West Bend and Heberer of the locals were both chased to the showers, four personal fouls being charged against each.

The Benders in the last half tried their utmost to win the game, calling in substitutes. Ritger replaced Warkey, Kirsch for Haebig, and Schuelke for Baehring. Melahn replaced Heberer for the locals. The box score:

Milwaukee 23, Ramblers 6

In the preliminary game the girls (Ramblers) team were easily defeated by the Milwaukee Lutheran A. A. champions by the overwhelming score of 22 to 6. The visitors outclassed and outplayed the Ramblers. The defense of the locals was weak while the defense of the visitors was very good. The first period ended Milwaukee 9, Kewaskum 1.

Kewaskum 2, Allenton 0

The winning streak of the local city basketball team kept on when they defeated the Allenton team at the latter place Tuesday evening. The game was awarded to Kewaskum, 2 to 0, by the referee, after Allenton refused to play, following an argument.

The game was very spirited contest and it is to be regretted that a certain Allenton spectator lost his head and struck Bert Elliott, a local player, while the latter was dribbling the ball. Naturally Elliott resented the blow, which soon brought a large number of spectators on the floor and consequently broke up the game. The trouble started when only four more minutes was left to play, Kewaskum then being in the lead, 7 to 14. The first half ended 13 to 6 in favor of Kewaskum.

John Muckerheide Manager

At a recent meeting of the City Basketball club John Muckerheide was elected manager to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Arthur W. Schaefer. Norbert Becker was elected assistant manager.

Oshkosh Normals vs. Kewaskum

Next Sunday evening, Jan. 17, at the high school gymnasium, the local city basketball team will clash with the Oshkosh Normals. The Oshkosh team comes here with a very good reputation and are in prime condition to stop the locals winning streak. A very good game can be expected. In the preliminary game the local girls (Ramblers) will meet the girls from Woodhull. First game will be called at 7:30 p. m.

WITTMAN WINS AIR RACES

Hubert Wittman, local barber, last Saturday afternoon received a telegram from his brother, Sylvester J. Wittman, stating the latter was successful in taking first honors for the All-American meet held the same day at Miami, Fla., with a tiny monoplane which he built himself.

Awarded trophies and prizes valued at more than $6,000.00.

Flying in two races he set up the fastest time of the meet and flew away from all competitors. His little red plane, Chief Oshkosh, has a wing spread of but 16 feet and a total wing surface of 52 square feet. His Cirrus engine develops less than 100 horsepower, yet he outflashed such world famous pilots as John Livingston, Douglas Davis, winner of the first Thompson trophy race three years ago, and Clyde Pangborn, winning both the Glen H. Curtiss free-for-all and the Green trophy donated by Col. E. H. R. Green of New Bedford.

The Green trophy race, a 30-mile event for planes of 125 horsepower or less, pitted Wittman against Livingston and his Warner monocoque. Using the racehorse start Livingston got away first with John Morris second. Wittman followed these two around the first pylon and then in the three-mile straight-away went to the fore. He averaged 164.75 miles per hour. Livingston was second.

In the Curtiss race, in which there was no power limit, Wittman got away first and at all times had his 90 horsepower engine turning up its full limit, more than 200 miles per hour. He led from the start and averaged 166.9 miles an hour. Arthur Davis was second at 165.2 M. P. H. Wittman was also scheduled to participate in a special bomb-dropping contest but the plane he was to have piloted was forced down in Ohio by bad weather.

Mr. Wittman built his plane during spare moments at the Oshkosh airport. It is called "Chief Oshkosh." He flew it first in Cleveland last year and at several lesser meets. He arrived in Miami last Saturday morning after encountering considerable bad weather on his trip from Wisconsin. He started out a week previous but was forced to return because of bad weather. He waited until the weather had cleared and started again two days later in a rain storm.

Wittman has participated in several cross-country air races and in one of them was forced down in a western desert. Another time he was forced to make a dangerous landing in a small field near Byron when ice and snow covered the wings of the plane.

Upon Mr. Wittman's return to Oshkosh he will be feted with a welcome by the entire city of Oshkosh. The program is being sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce of said city and promises to surpass every reception ever given.

The Children's Corner

EDITED BY DOROTHY EDMONDS

Happy Moon Legends

The Finding of Happy Moon.
The Red-children were frightened. The North Wind was angry. Old-man-above-the-sky woke up.

Now when Old-man-above-the-sky wakes up, even Na-quill hides. Old-man-above-the-sky was awake because the Moon was gone.

The North Wind was angry because the Moon was gone and he could no longer tell how many moons to wait before he brought the ice.

The Red-children were frightened because any change in the sky always frightens them. They ran about, crying. Their crying woke Strong Heart, who was asleep in bed. His bed was a hollow place between two hills.

At first Strong Heart sat still, wondering why the Red-children were making so much noise.

Then he looked up; the Moon was gone.

"Oh, good," he shouted. "Na-quill has taken the Moon for me."

All was dark. Strong Heart could see nothing, but he could hear a noise. The noise grew louder. It was a scream. It was the scream of the North Wind. The scream said, "Yee, wooooo, wooooo! I'll get you oooooo!"

Strong Heart shivered. Then he heard another sound.

"Thurump, thurump!" said the sound. It was the sound Na-quill's wings made as he flew through the air.

Strong Heart stood on top of a mountain and watched. He saw a strange race.

The starlight shone on the gold feathers in Na-quill's wings. The starlight shone on the North Wind. The North Wind was white and ugly. His feathers were sharp and terrible. He was throwing ice spears at Na-quill.

Na-quill was flying low. He flew over the trees in the hill where Strong Heart stood. The North Wind was flying after him. The North Wind threw a whole handful of arrows at him. He threw the arrows so hard that when they hit the ground they burst into white powder.

Then suddenly Na-quill rose high into the air. He flew off toward the South. In the South is the Place-of-Hot-Sand where the North Wind never goes.

The North Wind followed Na-quill till all of his arrows were gone. Then the North Wind himself had to run, for Na-quill turned.

Na-quill turned and chased the North Wind. Na-quill had filled his beak with hot sand.

The North Wind's wings are frozen.

together. The North Wind knew that if the hot sand touched his wings they would melt and drop off. So he flew fast and got safely back to the North again, but was still angry.

Strong Heart knew why Na-quill had flown over the forest. He guessed that there he should hunt for the missing Moon.

So Strong Heart went into the forest on the hillside. He looked under all the low hanging branches. He even looked behind the rocks. He even looked inside the ferns. He even looked behind the flowers. Because he did not know how small a new Moon is. Finally he found her. She was caught in the top of a tree. She was laughing down at him. She was slim. She was golden. She was beautiful. Her long, black hair was caught in the branches of the tree. She did not mind that. She was laughing.

"Help me down, please, Strong Heart," she said.

"Surely," said Strong Heart, and he helped her down.

"What is your name?" he asked.

"I have no name. I am too new."

"Then I shall call you Happy Moon," said Strong Heart. "Every one shall always call you Happy Moon."

Happy Moon laughed. She was always laughing.

After a while they heard Na-quill flying over them.

"Oh, there you are," said Na-quill. He stopped on a rock close by them.

"Help me down, please, Strong Heart," she said.

"Surely," said Strong Heart, and he helped her down.

"What is your name?" he asked.

"I have no name. I am too new."

"Then I shall call you Happy Moon," said Strong Heart. "Every one shall always call you Happy Moon."

Happy Moon laughed. She was always laughing.

After a while they heard Na-quill flying over them.

"Oh, there you are," said Na-quill. He stopped on a rock close by them.

My Neighbor Says

Milk bottles need careful cleaning because they go into the refrigerator. They should be dipped in cold water and dried with a clean cloth, with special attention to the paper cap, before entering the ice box.
If the white of an egg is beaten to a froth and added to cream, it will whip more easily and quickly.
When washing lace curtains, if no curtain stretcher is available, hang them while wet on curtain rods, pin to the casing under the window sill and in the cracks on the sides of the window and they will dry perfectly.

Use soap and water to clean white furniture, taking care that the water is not too hot and that the soap is pure, as impure soap will discolor the paint. Polish well with an old silk handkerchief.

Army Shows Progress

Made in Gas Warfare

Washington.—"Excellent progress" in preparing gases and protective equipment against gas for use in war was made by the Chemical Warfare Service of the army during the last year, Maj. Gen. Henry I. Gilchrist, chief, told Secretary of War Hurley in his annual report.
Gilchrist said that "special emphasis" had been placed on reducing the cost of some of the more expensive items of chemical warfare. Also, he said, the service has devised better protection against chemical agents.
During the past year the service made 25,574 gas masks for the army.

Psychologists Will Pick Navy Flyers

Washington.—Psychology will play a vital part in selection of the navy's aviators in the future if a series of experiments nearing completion prove satisfactory.
A wealth of data, collected on the basis of a study of naval aviation personnel over a period of four years, has revealed certain simple intelligence tests which may determine whether a man is fitted to fly, before he is ever allowed to venture off the ground, according to navy mental experts.

They plan to present their studies and conclusions to the navy general board with a recommendation that all navy aviation personnel be required to take to certain mental type standards before being allowed to train for flying. They have for several years been convinced their methods would save the lives of personnel to prevent destruction of expensive

He was breathing hard, for he had flown so hard after the North Wind. "I am angry at Koo Yaw. He waited till the Moon was half an hour old before he called me."

"See," said Happy Moon, "old man has hung up another Moon in my place. Now he has gone back to sleep."

"I shall leave that Moon up there," said Na-quill.

"I do not want another Moon," said Strong Heart, and Happy Moon laughed. She was always laughing.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK by WALTER TRUMBULL

An ancient sailorman, now ashore in New York, entertained an old friend. The entertainment consisted of considerable liquid refreshment. As the guest finally swayed to his feet to go, he picked up something off the table.

"Wait a minute," said the host, "them's my teeth."

"They are my teeth as I put them on the table," declared the guest.

"I tell you nobody can walk off with my teeth," said the host, so much annoyed that he drew back his lips in a snarl.

"You old fool," said the guest, "you're wearin' your teeth."

Doubtfully, the host put his thumb in his mouth and bit it.

"My mistake," he said. "So I am."

Mrs. Al Jolson, who was Ruby Keeler, is one of the most popular of the theatrical colony. I suppose you know the story of her aunt who lived in a small town and rarely saw metropolitan newspapers. Shortly after the marriage, this aunt happened on a theatrical section which carried a picture of Al Jolson in black face. In great perturbation she wrote to her sister, Mrs. Jolson's mother, saying:

"How could you let little Ruby do such a thing?"

A young man of Manhattan had a job with a big financial institution, but decided that there were too many men in line ahead of him and that they looked too healthy. So he looked around for another job and thought he would like to be a window dresser. He never had dressed any windows, but he talked the owner of an uptown shop into letting him try it. He did so well that others hired him and now he is with one of the large stores and drawing several times his bank salary.

Norman Bel Geddes says that, at the age of nine, he took part in theatrical performances held in a barn in Sag-naw, Mich. That's nothing. At the age of six, I performed in a circus held in a barnyard in Old Mission, Mich. The cows and chickens also performed, but rather unwillingly.

Victor Kilian, who was one of the cast of "Desire Under the Elms," and who more recently played in "Cloudy with Showers," has a peculiar hobby. He likes to build chimneys, in fact, he likes to do any sort of mason's work. He ran out of places to build chimneys on his own farm, so built some for his neighbors. When city people stop their cars and ask for directions, Mr. Kilian puts on a rube act that would be worth money in the theater.

There is a branch of the public library, on East Fifty-eighth street, which makes a specialty of theatrical literature. It has a special room devoted to books on theatrical matters. Among the least frequent visitors seem to be actors. I never saw one in there.

The public library on Fifth avenue is a great refuge in cold weather for those unfortunate who have no place else to get warm. They go in, ask for a book and sit at a table in the reading room until the place closes at 10 p. m. They are not obliged to read. As long as they stay awake, nobody disturbs them until closing hour. Some of them try to stow away in the library for the night, but an inspection is made and they always are discovered. Few persons appear to know that the library has a restaurant for its employees and other conveniences, which make it almost a little village in itself.

When it was found that the blaze could not be controlled the ship was towed out into the stream and consigned to a watery grave.

"WHY," inquires a reader, "do we call the small dried grape a currant?"

Another reader inquires as to the origin of the liqueur known as curacao.

It gives the writer great pleasure to kill both of these etymological birds with one stick, as it were.

We have "currant" from the French "raisins de Courant," meaning literally "grapes from Corinth" in Greece, from where, of course, they are exported all over the world.

We have "curacao" which, as has been stated, is a liqueur, because of the fact that it originated in the island of Curacao.

equipment, and they carried out exhaustive experiments to prove their case.

Officials in the naval station medicine office revealed that flying records, in virtually every case, have borne out prediction based on mental tests. In many cases those men whom the mental tests showed to be of a type unadaptable to flying have crashed to death or serious injury, and in almost every instance they have acquired flying records considered to be far from desirable from an efficiency standpoint.

The navy has not adopted the tests as part of the requirements for prospective flyers, but decision in the matter is expected in the near future.

Tests were carried out under the leadership of Capt. Dallas G. Sutton, navy representative at St. Elizabeth's hospital here. Sutton was at the Pensacola, Fla., naval air base when he began his experiments several years ago, and since that time has appointed members of the navy medical corps to co-operate with him.

SYNOPSIS

Acting in perfectly good faith in an effort to add a neighbor, Ruth Ingraham, in a business way, Edward Patterson, cashier of the Chicago agency of a life insurance company, is wrongfully accused by his wife, Edith, of infidelity. Her practical accusation, in a letter from her summer resort, undid him for business, and he takes a short vacation. Patterson's weakness is a shik-ke of responsibility. On his return from his vacation he is deeply wounded by his daughter, Edith, who is telling him that his personal belongings were in the "garage room," having been removed from the room which had been his and his wife's bedroom. Patterson accepts the situation as proof of his wife's belief in his guilt. Edith, 17 years old, is worried over the estrangement of her parents, having little more than a dim comprehension of the affair.

For a long time after that mother didn't say anything. She was sunk down ever so deep in her own thoughts. It wasn't until Edith remarked that she guessed she might as well get up, and had swung her legs out of the bed by way of carrying out this purpose, that her mother spoke. "I'm sorry you've been thinking things like that. We aren't very happy just now, your father and I. I can't tell you why. But I can't bear to have you made unhappy about it. I didn't realize that you were. I don't want you to side with me against him or to think unkind things about him. If I have made you do that, I haven't been fair—to him. It will work out somehow, I suppose. Tell it does, I—I want you to be fond of us both. And not go on worrying about something you can't possibly understand. Run along now, dear, and dress, and go down and have breakfast with him. But stop and give me a kiss first."

Mother called her back into the room just before the girl was dressed. "There's something I'd like you to do, Edith. See if dad won't go with you to the matinee, instead of me. I don't know whether he'll think he can get away from the office or not. But if he can, I wish he would. I really mean it, dear. I've got a committee meeting this afternoon that I hate to miss, anyhow."

Dad had agreed, after a blink of surprise and not much more than a minute of consideration, to cut business for the afternoon and take her to the show. He had been genuinely pleased by the proposal and all the more so, apparently, because it involved playing truant.

He was waiting for her in the station. He blinked at her as she came up to him. Until she got quite near, he said, he hadn't realized who she was. That was the polo coat, of course, and the chrysanthemums, which some of the girls at school would remember her birthday, had given her.

"We'll take a taxi over to the theater," he remarked. "This is going to be a real party. It's a long time since I've taken a pretty girl to a show."

Edith had been in the theater numerous times, but this was her first experience of being a pretty girl getting taken to a show, and she got a real thrill out of it. For that proved to be no mere idle compliment of dad's. He didn't act parental at all. Along in the first act, as soon as things began to get funny and exciting, they found each other's hands and kept them clasped through most of the play for convenience in communicating their special moments of enjoyment.

Of course the curtain had to come down at last. Dad helped her into her polo coat and slipped his hand through her arm as they walked up the aisle while the orchestra played the people out, which somehow kept the spell alive a little longer. But at last they were out on the sidewalk, and it seemed that the inevitable end had come.

A faint, half-pleasurable melancholy invaded her spirit and colored her voice as she said, "We may as well walk over to the station. We've got lots of time for the five-o'clock. Really, she wasn't hinting. A cab had swooped down invitingly to the curb before them, and she had felt her father, who still had hold of her arm, hesitate. Otherwise she wouldn't have said a word.

"No," he said with sudden resolution, "we'll finish this thing off properly. Hop in." And then, amazingly, she heard him tell the chauffeur to drive, not to the North Western station, but to the street number of their home in Lakeside.

"I think," she told him, deep in the wonder of it, "that this has been just about the most perfect time I've ever had."

His only answer to that was to find her hand and squeeze it.

They went back over the play once more. "I don't suppose," she admitted, "that it could have happened really."

"No," he assented. "What a play like that is trying to do is to make people forget for a while what can really happen. We're all hungry, you see, for adventure, for something that's left out of our lives, and that sort of play gives it to us. It's like a dream, only better."

splendidly successful; any more than box of pieces-of-eight or a treasure waiting in the hands of people who don't know what to do with it. And this thing wants it! It's got to have it.

"There's an enormous profit in it at five dollars if I can manufacture it economically. Of course my costs just now are out of all reason. They won't come down until I can get into volume production and I discount my bills. I don't need much to put the thing on its feet. It's a joke how little I need. Six thousand dollars! But unless I can get it— Oh, of course, I will. But I didn't know just where to turn until I came upon this insurance policy. I'll either borrow the money on it and give you my note, or I can turn it in outright if you prefer."

All the buoyancy and confidence that had marked his manner while he talked about his invention was gone now. He was again the shabby, necessitous failure he had looked when he took his seat beside Edward's desk.

Edward's heart sank. "Well," he said, trying to speak cheerfully, "let's come down to figures. It's just a question of arithmetic now, you know."

It turned out just about as he'd guessed. The policy was worth a little over fourteen hundred dollars. He wrote it on a slip of paper and slid

CHAPTER III

The Optimist

It was at this point that James Mariner came into Edward's life. There was nothing extraordinary about the man or his errand. The gist of Edward's job was dealing with people like him, hearing their explanations, listening with an air of sympathy to the tale of their troubles, discounting their hopes; and finally seeing to it that the great insurance company's rights were guarded to the last penny.

James Mariner's case was one of the commonest sort. Years ago, when he'd been temporarily prosperous and believed he was going to be rich, he'd taken out a big life insurance policy. The riches hadn't materialized, and after paying a few premiums he'd let the policy lapse. He'd come upon it the other day, while looking over some old papers in his box, and he wanted to realize on it. It must be worth he thought at least six thousand dollars—anyhow six thousand was what he wanted. Edward felt sure, again from long experience, that the cash surrender value of the policy would prove to be nothing like that amount. Also, before the interview had lasted five minutes, he saw that despair had fortified Mariner in whatever belief he had that he could get his six thousand or anywhere near that.

He evaded coming down to facts and figures; he wanted to put off the moment of disillusionment as long as he could. He wanted to tell his story first.

The story could have no possible bearing on the case. You had only to look it up in a little well-worn book of tables to know to a cent how much Mariner was entitled to be paid for his policy. Neither the urgency of his needs nor the brilliancy of his expectations had any relevancy in the matter at all. Yet, it was out of something more than mere tolerant good nature that Edward let the man tell his story. He didn't know why he did. He told himself bitterly, as he sat back to listen—with only half his mind at first—that his own desperation, his sense of failure, his lacerated self-esteem was finding momentary comfort in his visitor's appeal.

It wasn't long, though, before he forgot to think about himself. When Mariner began telling what he wanted the money for, a change came over him. The stigma of failure faded out. Despite the gray streaks in his hair and the lines in his lean face, there was something about him that gave Edward an impression of youth. He wanted something tremendous, and it was something that he saw—almost within his reach. Yet his manner was not that of a visionary. He had not forgotten how to smile.

It appeared he was an inventor. His most important invention had been a carburetor for automobiles. It should have made him a very rich man, for the principle of it had proved to be sound and was now in almost universal use; but he had got involved disastrously in litigation. You had to have millions behind you to get anywhere with that, and he had had no backing at all.

"I wandered in the wilderness a while"—he smiled reflectively as he said that—"trying my hand at all sorts of things; the less I knew about them the better they looked. But I waked up at last and went back to my own field. I've invented a device for giving a motor the sort of mixture it needs, a rich or lean, automatically."

He broke off for another smile. "It isn't likely of course, humanly speaking, that the thing is as good as it looks to me. The man with one idea gets to be a fanatic about it. But I do know this, as solid, scientific matter of fact: if the thing's half as good as it looks to me, or even a quarter as good, it's revolutionary."

"I don't base that statement on theory, but on experience. I'm manufacturing the thing in a small way, and selling it; and it works, Mr. Paterson. It does the business. Here! Perhaps you'd like to look at it." He plunged his hand into one of the bulging pockets of his overcoat and pulled out a small piece of apparatus about the size of an apple, made of aluminum.

Mariner, with a twist of the wrist, took it apart. "That's the thing that does the business," he pointed out, coiled up ribbon of whitish metal. "When it's cold—when the motor is cold—it's coiled tightly as a choke to the now, and serves as a choke to the air supply. Makes your mixture rich. When it gets warm, and lets in the air, it expands, opens up, and lets the air. Look here." He struck a match and held it near the coil. Edward, and held it near the coil. Edward, and held it near the coil. Edward, and held it near the coil. Edward, and held it near the coil.

He didn't ask about the composition of the metal but assumed it must be a profound secret. "Well, that's very interesting," he said. "I certainly wish you success."

"It will succeed all right. There's no question about that. But whether I succeed with it is a question of money. You see I'm d-d by lack of capital. It's enough to make a man turn Bolshevik to see the money lying around in the hands of people who don't know what to do with it. And this thing wants it! It's got to have it.

ward would call him up and tell him he could have the money? It was Edward's duty of course to put him out of his misery. And yet, when it came to the point of unhooking his receiver and calling Mariner's number, his will seemed paralyzed. Perhaps, if he waited a while longer, he'd learn that Mariner had got the money. Some one, friend or stranger, might have turned up with the needed help. Not a rich man necessarily. Mariner's help, if he got it, would be somebody's savings. It was the poor who took long chances. Six thousand dollars in the savings bank or in Liberty bonds didn't amount to much, Edward knew. The amount he himself had succeeded in putting by amounted, outside his house and his life insurance, to just a little more than that. If anybody yielded, to Mariner's spell, it would be somebody in a pair of shoes very like his own. Somebody who, in the regular course of things, hadn't much to hope for.

His muscles tightened suddenly and his heart gave an unexpected flutter. There was a wild idea! Nonsensical, of course, but literally true. He could give Mariner his six thousand dollars tomorrow morning. It was only a question of getting into the bank and unlocking his strong box. Oh, no, he wouldn't actually do anything like that—not yet. But it was an amusing thing to have thought of. Imagine how Julia would look when he told her!

The day had worn itself out at last. There was hardly anyone left in the office. There was nothing left for him to do but go home. Home to another dinner of frozen silence; an evening of pretending to read; another restless, beastly night in the spare-room bed. Was that Julia's step in the hall? Was she coming to his door? Oh, G-d!

He wouldn't go home yet. There was a certain peacefulness in the silence now the activities of the office were dying down; an occasional door opening and shutting; a voice saying good night to somebody. He'd stay a little longer. He must telephone to Mariner before he went home.

Two salesmen were talking frantically as they lounged toward the outer door. One was urging something, and the other was holding back. Presently the urgent one raised his voice a little with a note of exasperation. "Oh, don't be a crab!" he said. "You're getting more like Old Aunt Patty every day."

Edward's face prinkled at the words. He caught his breath in something like a laugh before his mind had had time to tell him whom the young man meant by "Old Aunt Patty." It wasn't an accepted nickname of his. At least he'd never heard it before. But there was no mistaking it.

Edward tried to tell himself he was amused. He'd spring that nickname himself tomorrow on one of those young fellows and see what he looked like. But he couldn't manage that attitude. His lips were trembling. There was a lump in his throat. He'd had enough and a little over.

In another minute, with the receiver at his ear, he was asking Mariner to dine with him at half past six at the club.

He felt shaky as he walked to the club, tremulous, excited and depressed at the same time. He didn't mean to do anything, not in a hurry. He made himself a solemn promise while he waited for Mariner that he wouldn't bind himself to anything tonight. He'd make a visit to the factory, too, in order to get a notion, such as his layman's mind could form, of the actual physical basis of the inventor's prospects.

This promise stood him in good stead during their long talk over the dinner table and after. Mariner was a hard man to resist. The mere possibility that he'd found a rescuer had restored the manner which he had for a few minutes attained during the interview in the office. The stricken, desperate look about him was gone.

He didn't pretend that the adventure was a sure thing. "Of course it involves taking a chance," he said. "If it didn't, you wouldn't be getting in for six thousand dollars. But if you can see anything wrong in my calculations I wish you'd tell me what it is. I know I'm not impartial. I'm telling you how it looks to me. So if you can find any blow-holes in it, I wish you would."

Edward couldn't see any holes. Not if one granted the assumption that the device would work. He couldn't seriously dispute that assumption either. Mariner must know whether it worked or not. And everything about the story indicated his entire good faith. He'd put in every cent he could scrape together. And the man's manner, every unguarded phrase and gesture, showed that he was in deadly earnest.

Edward wondered at his self-restraint; and also, a little, at his liberality. He proposed to give Edward, in consideration of his six thousand dollars, a 40 per cent interest in the company.

"I wouldn't surrender the control of it," he said quietly, "for ten times that, nor twenty. This thing's mine, and I'm going to keep it mine. But I've got to have help."

Edward clung to his promise. "I'm not going to agree to go in tonight," he said. "I'll think it over, and I'll come out to your place in the morning and have a look at the plant. Also I may want to talk to a friend of mine—a manufacturer—and get his opinion. For I don't suppose another twenty-four hours, or even forty-eight, would be fatal."

From a remote corner of his mind came the whispered hope that Mariner would say it would be fatal, that it was now or never. Then he could say no and the thing would be over. The mere notion of telling Bert Willard about it turned him a bit cold.

But Mariner didn't say now or never. He was disappointed perhaps, but the disappointment didn't show. His line was that the more Edward thought about it and the further he looked into it, the better it would seem. To his mind, it was already settled.

POULTRY

SOME POINTERS ON CARE OF BREEDERS

Green Feed Always Matter of Importance.

The way in which the breeding stock is fed and cared for from now until the hatching season will determine, to a great extent, the hatchability obtained from the eggs. Experiments indicate that exposure to sunshine, green feed and milk are conducive to good hatchability and strong chicks. This means that the breeders should have free range, except in stormy weather, where they will be exposed to a maximum amount of sunshine. If there is green feed on the range, so much the better. Between now and the hatching season brightly cured alfalfa hay, clover or soy bean leaves will provide adequate green feed or if preferred from 5 to 10 per cent alfalfa leaf meal may be included in the laying mash. If milk is available on the farm the breeders should be placed in the preferred class to receive it. If supplied in large quantities it may take the place of one-half of the meal scrap given in the laying mash. In addition one should not forget to feed liberally of yellow corn and oyster shell, or some other equally satisfactory source of shell making material should be provided. In sections of Missouri where the amount of sunshine is not abundant it may be advisable to feed cod liver oil at the rate of 1 per cent of the mash or 1 pint to 100 pounds of mash.—Missouri Farmer.

Pays to Add Milk to Hens' Regular Ration
Milk, at present prices a relatively cheap food, deserves a place in the poultry ration. If liquid milk is available on the farm, this form is the cheapest to use. For every gallon of liquid milk fed daily to each 100 hens, the protein concentrate in the mash may be reduced 5 per cent. If liquid milk is not available, dried milk may be used in the mash. When liquid milk is not available for the poultry ration, the following grain ration is recommended by the poultry specialists. For the mash: Ground yellow corn, 40 pounds; ground wheat, 20 pounds; ground oats, 20 pounds; dried milk, five pounds; meat scraps, 15 pounds; salt, one pound. For the grain: Cracked corn, 50 pounds; wheat, 40 pounds; and oats or barley, 10 pounds.

Valuable Pullet
A Barred Plymouth Rock pullet in the Pennsylvania State college flock laid 301 eggs in her first year of production. E. W. Callenbach, of the college poultry husbandry department, reported.

No. 2311, as she is known to the poultry plant workers, started laying September 16, 1930, when she was only 163 days old, an unusually early beginning for a bird of the Barred Rock variety. Her eggs average 25 ounces a dozen.

Four sisters of the new Penn State recordbreaker laid over 200 eggs each for the year. Their production was 210, 234, 262 and 264 eggs. The dam of these pullets laid 227 eggs in her first year of production and 165 eggs the second year.

Poultry Notes
It is possible to influence the maturity of chicks by the amount of protein fed them before ten weeks of age.

Rough handling may loosen the air cells in eggs and cause them to lose quality quickly, even though the eggs are well packed.

Research at several agricultural colleges indicates that young chickens develop more rapidly than do older ones, and that it requires less feed to put a pound of weight on young chickens than on older ones.

Hens eat about six pounds of grain a month. To feed this much grain to hens that do not lay eggs is simply wasting the feed.

Green feed of some kind should be supplied to laying hens throughout the year.

Crowding in a corner causes the birds to sweat; this, in turn, makes them susceptible to colds, chickenpox and kindred diseases. Many good pullets have been ruined in that way.

The western states have a turkey crop this year about 5 per cent smaller than last.

Several of the diseases that attack growing chicks are definitely traced to a lack of vitamins in their rations.

Pennsylvania poultry yielded products valued at $42,737,000 during the year, a total of $1,000,000 greater than the nearest competitor, Ohio. A report showed 1,766,000,000 eggs produced in the state during the year.

It takes feed to make a pullet produce eggs at a profit. Pullets on free range do not obtain all the mash they need. Egg production is consequently kept down.

Whether eggs are fertile can be told after five days of incubation by testing them before an egg tester. A home made egg tester can be put together by inserting an electric lamp globe in a small box on one side of which an opening is cut against which to hold an egg.

FIVE NEW PHILCO MODELS 1932 Line

Includes Special-Purpose Radios With the new year comes the announcement by Miller's Furniture Store, local distributor, of the 1932 line of Philco Radios augmented with five new and distinct models, each designed to meet the demands of a special purpose.

The new numbers include a 5-tube Baby Grand Superheterodyne and a 5-tube Superheterodyne Lowboy. This places the advantages of the Superheterodyne Circuit within the reach of a modest purse with the option of two attractive cabinets.

Having met with a large demand for short wave receiving parts and while continuing its present short wave converter model, the Philco line introduces two types of combination long and short wave receiver, a 7-tube and a 9-tube, both of which are Superheterodynes.

These sets, besides receiving ordinary broadcasts will pick up Europe, South America, airplane, police, amateur and other short wave messages all with a single dial control. The outstanding new member of the Philco family is the Model 112X, an 11-tube Superheterodyne-Plus instrument with a new and distinctive Sounding Board and an Echo-absorbing Screen, both features being products of the Philco Engineering Laboratories and covered by patents and other patents pending.

A Colonial Mantel Clock of the Eli Terry type, with electrical movement and containing a 5-tube Superheterodyne Radio Receiver, is also included in the 1932 line. It is an interesting number and one which may well find a place in many homes, in addition to other radio equipment.

Rascal, a dog owned by William Albers, cheesemaker and proprietor of a store at Armstrong, performed a feat Friday which will long be remembered by Harry Sheldon, a laborer residing a mile from the store.

The dog wandered to the home of Sheldon, who lives alone and who had been ill with gripe for three days. Unable to get into communication with anyone in any other way Sheldon penned a note telling of his illness and asking for supplies and tied the message to the canine's neck.

When the dog returned to the store his master found the note and immediately went to Sheldon's home with the supplies asked for by the sick man. Neighbors also went to the assistance of Sheldon, who is now recovering.

Early Diving Suit

The diving suit is not so new as one might think. A patent was granted to John S. Appleton on March 17 1893, for "a new engine so by him contrived as to permit a person enclosed in it to walk under water, and to a new invented way to force air into any depth of water to supply the person in the suit engine therewith and for continuing a lamp burning under water; also a way to desiccate and purify the air so as to make the same serviceable for respiration."

The seven were said to be members of a band that committed a score of burglaries and thefts here during November and December. Four of the boys will be sent to the Green Bay reformatory and the state industrial school at Wauskeha, while the other three have been placed on probation.

Madison—Reorganization of the state banking department was practically assured as the result of agreement by the senate to the assembly's stand on an amendment to the Groschmidt bill. The assembly refused to concur in an amendment to make trust companies eligible as public depositories, and the senate withdrew the amendment. The bill as it was approved by both houses and prepared for consideration by Gov. La Follette would reorganize the banking department and increase powers of the banking commissioner. A banking review board, consisting of five members appointed by the governor, would be created to act in advisory capacity to the commissioner.

Madison—The senate has killed Governor La Follette's $10,000,000 compromise relief bill; the assembly has defeated the Nelson $7,000,000 bill; the two houses of the legislature are in a deadlock firmer than ever; the progressives want to end the special session and go home, and the conservatives and independents insist they will stay "until Christmas" to pass some kind of a relief measure. That, in a nutshell, was the status of the unemployment relief question after the hectic legislative sessions of Jan. 8, which lasted in the senate chamber until a few minutes short of midnight. The senate killed the La Follette-Beggs $10,000,000 bill, with its provisions for the taxing of net cash incomes, dividends, chain stores and gifts by a vote of 16 to 14. The assembly refused to concur in the Nelson $7,000,000 bill, providing for a two-year increase in the normal income taxes, by a majority of 49 to 27.

GANDHI PUT IN JAIL; INDIA AGAIN FLAMES

Mahatma Urges Christians to Aid in Struggle.

Bombay—A quick succession of events, begun with the arrest and jailing of Mahatma Gandhi threw India into another definite break with Great Britain.

As the cell doors of "Gandhi's room" in the Yeravda jail at Poona closed behind the aged leader of India's fight for liberty, his followers declared a hartel, or general strike, effective immediately throughout Bombay and soon to be followed throughout the country.

A few hours after the government struck again, issuing an emergency ordinance empowering the Bombay and Bengal governments to "control" and arrest, if necessary, all persons suspected of "acting in a manner prejudicial to public safety and peace and furthering such prejudicial movements."

Gandhi then sought to enlist the Christians of India in his fight against the British government, calling it a Christian "struggle of peace."

In the meantime the battle was well begun, with nationalists and their followers pressing a strict boycott on British and foreign goods and the government retaliating with more group arrests.

With one blow 45 organizations affiliated with the nationalists congress in Calcutta and its suburbs were declared unlawful by the government.

In his appeal to Christians Gandhi said: "I have full trust that in the present struggle who tender your loyalty to One whom you call the Prince of Peace will not be behind any other community in a struggle which is essentially based on peace."

He urged Christians to adopt spinning wheel and homespun garments and to renounce drink.

Police took possession of the headquarters of the congress committee at Patna after arresting Rajendra Prasad, president of the Nationalist congress, and six leaders of the provincial congress. Prasad had just been appointed when Patel was taken to jail with Gandhi.

Dr. M. A. Ansari, appointed to succeed Mr. Prasad, was the third person to hold the office in two days.

The Nationalists decided to boycott the three round table conference committees due here at the end of this month, by way of reprisal for the arrest of the Mahatma and other leaders.

Bombay, Nationalist hotbed, assumed a grave aspect of war. Yellow-turbaned police with staves stood ready to arrest or punish civil resisters. Nationalist volunteer ambulances were standing by to pick up victims of expected encounters.

White-capped youths parading through the shopping districts chanted the refrain: "Boycott British Goods!" Processions of rebels, among whom women were numerous, harangued the public to rise against the British masters.

American Consul Beaten by Japanese Soldiers

Mukden, Manchuria.—Three uniformed Japanese soldiers attacked Culver B. Chamberlain, American consul at Harbin, formerly of Kansas City, Mo., on one of Mukden's main streets. The incident was immediately made the subject of a strong verbal protest which American Consul General Myrl S. Myers lodged with S. Morishima, consul temporarily in charge of the Japanese consulate general at Mukden.

Chamberlain, ten years in the consular service in China, arrived at Mukden from his vacation in America enroute to his new post at Harbin. He suffered abrasions to his forehead and nose, and his face was badly bruised from blows from fists of the Japanese soldiers.

Washington.—Japan formally apologized to the United States for the attack on American Consul Culver B. Chamberlain by three Japanese at Mukden. Acting on instructions of his government, Ambassador Deubuchi of Japan expressed to Secretary Stimson at the state department the Japanese government's "sincere regret" over the "unfortunate incident at Mukden."

Gross Farm Income Off 26 Per Cent During 1931

The estimate includes the value of farm products sold and those consumed in the farm home.

The department said the gross farm income for the United States in 1931 was probably equal to the pre-war 1909-1913 average and was the lowest since 1911.

FEDERAL SALARY CUT OPPOSED BY HOOVER

Thinks It Would Set Country a Bad Example.

Washington.—President Hoover prepared to take a definite stand against any general federal wage cut, should proposals for such a move reach the stage of congressional action. This was assured in authoritative quarters.

The President has made no public statement as to the various proposals in both the senate and the house that would slash federal salaries from 10 to 20 per cent in almost all classes, but the word was passed among administration leaders at the Capitol that he is ready to take an adamant stand.

Should proposals receive widespread support, it was said definitely he would declare for maintenance of government wages.

He feels definitely not only that the government must maintain its wage scale to retain capable officials in responsible offices, but also that the government would set the country a bad example by any general wage reduction.

Senator Borah introduced several measures that would lower the salaries of the Vice President, the speaker and all cabinet members from $15,000 to $12,000, clash congressional wages from $10,000 to $8,000 and members of the farm board from $12,000 to $9,000.

Simultaneously Representative McGugin (Rep., Kan.) suggested an emergency reduction ranging from 10 per cent on incomes in the lower brackets to 20 per cent on salaries over $5,000.

HOOVER URGES QUICK ACTION FOR RELIEF

Senators Vote Government Wheat for the Needy.

Washington.—Congress had no sooner convened after its two-week holiday than President Hoover transmitted an urgent special message emphasizing the need for stimulating credit that was greater than a month ago and was renewing his demand for immediate action on his eight-point program.

In an emergency atmosphere heightened by subsequent senate passage of a bill to distribute 40,000,000 bushels of farm board wheat to the needy, the President's message declared that "the unjustifiable fear in the country" could and must be replaced by confidence.

The President pointed out that his recommendations followed consultation with leaders of both parties and of every line of business, industry and agriculture; that national unity was essential to economic recovery as to the winning of war, and that his proposals furnished "the basis for full collaboration."

It was indicated that the President's emergency reconstruction finance cooperation plan would be passed without more delay, after eliminating some difficulties, but the Democrats were hesitating about the plans for creating a home loan discount system, for increasing the capitalization of federal land banks while not extending the same aid to joint stock land banks, and for liberalizing the federal reserve rediscount rules.

The senate's vote to take 40,000,000 bushels of wheat from the government-owned surplus and put it at the disposal of the Red Cross and other relief agencies to be milled and furnished free to the destitute and needy, was the first direct federal relief proposal to pass either house.

John Barton Payne, national chairman of the Red Cross, told a house committee that if congress makes the available government-owned wheat, the Red Cross will undertake its distribution to the needy.

Payne was testifying before the agriculture committee which was considering measures similar to that passed by the senate. He recommended that provision be made to pay for the cost of processing the wheat with the by-products. He estimated the cost of milling at $5,000,000.

While Payne was giving his views to the house committee, Representative Huddleston of Alabama was asking the senate manufactures committee to approve direct federal appropriations for unemployment relief. Huddleston is a Democratic sponsor of a bill to that end.

Representing the Birmingham district, he told of conditions in that industrial center, estimating 25,000 wage earners out of employment there.

The Democratic tariff plan was laid before the house by Representative John W. Collier, Mississippi. It did not deal with schedules but proposed to request the President to call an international conference for negotiating reciprocal tariff adjustments, to amend the Hawley-Smoot act so that the tariff commission would report his recommendations to congress instead of the President, and to create a "consumers' counsel" to represent the cause of consumers before the tariff commission.
