The Nation's Greatest Son

This portrait of George Washington, highly prized possession of Marshall Solberg, Chicago, is claimed by him to have been painted by Gilbert Stuart. It bears the year 1794, and is signed by the master in an inconspicuous way. Some have thought that the earliest "Stuart Washington" was painted in 1795, but such is not the case, for John Jay gave Gilbert Stuart a letter to Washington which Stuart delivered while congress was in session in the year 1794 and Stuart refers to this in correspondence with relatives. It was then that one of the three sittings occurred. There were many portraits of George Washington painted by Gilbert Stuart, but there were only three sittings, so that many of the portraits were copied by Stuart from either completed pictures or sketches. It was, of course, not entirely unusual for great painters to make preliminary sketches of their subjects, although they did on many occasions entirely complete their paintings at sittings. This latter procedure was followed, it is thought, by Gilbert Stuart in this portrait. If this is so, it stands unique among the "Stuart Washingtons."

According to a volume in Mr. Solberg's library, Gilbert Stuart admired this picture so much that he retained it himself and would not part with it for many years thereafter. When it landed in the hands of Congressman Gilbert of western New York he loved it so much that he asked that it might be the last object for him to gaze upon in this life.

Washington, Man, Patriot, Statesman

COURAGE, physical and moral, was a part of his nature; and, whether in battle or in the midst of popular excitement, he was fearless of danger and regardless of consequences to himself. (Sparks, Jared-The Life of George Washington, p. 458.)

At all times and amid all conditions splendid manhood. Hypocrisy and a trafficking in expedients for popular applause no more match with his life than the crime of murder. He had little of the captivating style of speech or manner but regard for the nobility of his character, rather than any rhetorical art or charm of personal address on his part, kept wavering lines from retreat in battle and from mutiny amid privation and suffering to which our neglect had exposed the soldiers of the Revolution. (Underwood, Oscar-The Career and the Words of Washington, p. 12.) (State Society of Cincinnati, Philadelphia, Pa., February 22, 1912.) His Personal Triumph

Then came the horrors of Valley Forge and of the winters in Morris county. Those were the days when desertions were many and enlistments were few, when Washington dared not give open battle and there was hardly left to him a place for retreat. Then came the Conway conspiracy, and the ambition of Gates, and the cowardice of Lee and the treason of Arnold, and a series of persecutions so petty, so bitter, so malignant, that it is amazing how Washington survived them. Then, too, came defeats like that at Brandywine, and battles of uncertain meaning like that at Monmouth. . .

It is easy for us as we read these events in the light of the issue to keep up our courage and understand the triumph that finally came, but it was a very different thing for Washington. Congress was weak, meddlesome, and vacillating. The soldiers were raw, undisciplined and sometimes mutinous. There were jealousies and libels and forgeries and slanders almost beyond our present ability to believe. . . When I recall Washington's calmness in the midst of exasperating annoyances, his unselfish loyalty when surrounded by cupidity and jealousy and hatred, his faith that put courage into the hearts of men who marched hungry and left bloody footprints in the snow; when I remember how after eight years of this and more he emerged victorious, as calm in victory as he had been serene in defeat, I do not wonder that Frederick the Great is said to have pronounced George Washington's campaign in the Jersies the most brilliant in military annals.

Washington did not leave his men and go home to live in luxury, but stayed to endure privation with them. Only he who reads his letters written during these trying times can appreciate his troubles and anxieties. (Mc-Laughlin, Andrew C .- History of the American Nation, p. 168.) Behold him (George Washington) in 1775 taking leave of his family and his home, and hastening to the relief of a distant and then unknown part of America. See him transforming and cementing a band of rustics into an army. Follow him to the field of battle, and see him first in danger and last out of it. Go with him into Valley Forge, and see him sharing the soldier in the camp. Was there ever such fortitude in adversity? Was there ever such moderation in the hour of victory? (McMaster, John B.—History of the People of the United States, Vol. I, p. 465.)

Washington's Victory

On only one point did there seem to be unanimity and accord. That was that the dogged prosecution of the war and the ultimate victory must be credited to George Washington. Others had fought valiantly and endured nardships and fatigues and gnawing suspense, but without him, who never vavered, they could not have gone on. (Thayer, William R .- George Washington, p. 128.) The American revolution from itary point of view was a group of little wars rather than a single war. The one integrating force was the person of the great commander, but George Washington held the army and the cause together by his exhaustless patience and courage rather than by any comprehensive plan of war. (Muzzey, David S .- History of the American People, p. 130.)

To Washington no duty, however obscure, was unimportant, and no deviation from duty, however trifling, was possible. (Hoar, George F .- Washington, p. 31.) (Chicago, February 23, 1903.)

Put Patriotism First

Washington was an incorruptible patriot. He was one of the few rich men who was not a Tory. A very large proportion of men of large means sided with the British crown; nor must we too hastily condemn them. But' Washington, who had more to lose than almost any other man in the thirteen colonies, was not blinded by vested interests, nor bound to conservative action by his wealth and station

For the sake of the country which he loved he suffered innumerable hardships, was stung by ingratitude and hurt by slander, but he stood firm in his loyalty to the cause he had espoused, and was faithful to the end. (Barton, William E .- George Washington.) There is a life that is worth living now, as it was worth living in the former days, and that is the honest life, the useful life, the unselfish life, cleansed by devotion to an ideal. There is a battle that is worth fighting now, as it was worth fighting then, and that is the battle for justice and equality. To make our city and our state free in fact as well as in name; to break the rings that strangle real liberty, and to keep them broken; to cleanse, so far as in our power lies, the foundations of our national life from political, commercial, and social corruption: to teach our sons and daughters, by precept and example, the honor of serving such a country as hunger, the cold, the fatigue of every | America-that is work worthy of the i of the federal government.

finest manhood and womanhood. . . The well educated are those who see deepest into the meaning and the necessity of that work. Nor shall their labor be for naught, nor the reward of their sacrifice fail them. For high in the firmament of human destiny are set the stars of faith in mankind, and unselfish courage, and loyalty to the ideal; and while they shine, the Americanism of Washington and the men who stood with him shall never, never die. (Van Dyke, Henry-The Americanism of Washington, pp. 70-72.)

Man of Firm Friendships

The chief thought that runs through all the sayings is to practice self-con- an interesting field of work for poultrol, and no man ever displayed that try breeders and may be of considmost difficult of virtues to such a de gree as George Washington. (Lodge, Henry C .- George Washington (American Statesmen), Vol. I, p. 51.) Solitude, indeed, is the last quality that an intelligent student of his career would ascribe to him. Dignified and reserved he was, undoubtedly: and as this manner was natural to him, he won more true friends by using it than if he had disguised himself in a forced familiarity and worn his heart upon his sleeve. But from first to last he was a man who did his work in the bonds of companionship, who trusted his comrades in the great enterprise even though they were not his intimates, and who neither sought nor occupied a lonely eminence of un-Americanism of Washington, pp. 4-5.) His passions were strong, and sometimes they broke out with vehemence but he had the power of checking them in an instant. Perhaps self-control was the most remarkable trait of his character. It was in part the effect of his discipline; yet he seems by nature to have possessed the power to a degree which has been denied to other men. (Sparks, Jared-The Life of George Washington, p. 460.)

When Philadelphia Was

The celebration of Washington's birthday recalls to Philadelphians the days when their city was the nation's capital and the first President lived in the old Morris mansion, at Sixth and High streets, now Sixth and Market.

The mansion, built by Robert Morris, financier of the Revolution, was a three-story yellow brick structure. with gardens of flowering trees, shrubs and fruit and shade trees to conceal it from the passerby on old High street.

Morris' home was selected as the most charming residence in the city and the proper residence for the President when the congress voted in 1790 to make the Quaker city the capital for a period of ten years until the new federal city could be planned and built on the Potomac.

Washington came to the city from his home at Mount Vernon in November of 1791, in time for the opening of congress.

The rooms of the old mansion, which have long since been sacrificed to the gods of commerce and industry, witnessed events of the greatest importance in the formation of the Republic.

EGG-PRICE RATIO TO BE CONSIDERED

Highly Important Factor in Poultry Raising.

The main cause of profit or loss on commercial poultry farms in the East is the relation between the price of eggs and the price of feed, says E. G. Misner of the New York State College of Agriculture. He points out that the wholesale price of grains which go into the poultry ration has recently averaged 74 per cent of the pre-war price, while the price of the highest grade of eggs in New York state has averaged 103 per cent. He says that this is the reverse of last winter and spring, when feed was above pre-war price and eggs were only four-fifths of it. In other words, the egg-price ratio is now more favorable to the grower than at any recent time.

Among other factors which make for profits, the first need is high egg production from each hen; to show profit birds must produce considerably more than 120 eggs a year. On 124 commercial farms in New York in 1930, the average number of eggs was 144 for each bird, and only one-fourth of the farms produced more than 160 eggs a bird. These farms made four times as much as those with a production of less than 130 eggs.

Yet high egg production, adds Professor Misner, is not enough; a large number of layers is necessary so that the total income will be big enough to pay the interest on the capital invested and to return good wages to the operator. Two thousand laying hens or more are needed to produce a labor income of more than $100 a month. With less than this number of birds on a commercial plan, the flock does not afford full-time employment for a poultryman.

"Long-Distance" Layer Is Worth Considering

The theory that pullets alone pay as egg producers is being modified. Pullets do lay more eggs than year old hens and in better season. But it costs money to buy or raise them. If a bird in her pullet year produces 291 eggs and in her second year 218 it is clear that she is of the sort that should not be summarily dealt with after one year's production. It would pay to keep her for egg production alone and of considerably more importance to retain her for breeding purposes. The hen referred to is a Barred Rock on the Agassiz farm. She and 15 other Barred Rocks under test produced an average of 187 eggs in their second year. In five years one of these hens laid 1,076 eggs, an average yearly production of 215. The development of long-distance layers offered to the poultry industry -Nor'West Farmer.

Poultry Run Rotation

Internal parasites and disease are the twin terrors of the poultry breeder. Running the birds on the same land two or more years in succession is the cause of most of their troubles, of almost a full hundred per cent of those due to internal parasites. At Sidney, Vancouver Island experimental station, the poultry yards are operated under a definite 3-year rotation-1, clover and grass: 2, roots: 3, grain. The young chicks are run only on the turf land. Two years out of three the runs are in crop and shared glory. (Van Dyke, Henry-The are twice plowed before the birds are returned to them in the third year, -Exchange.

Isolate Sick Hens

Every poultry farm should have a hospital or some place apart from the rest of the flock where sick birds can be examined and treated. If you are not a poultry disease expert let your local veterinarian or the poultry disease laboratory diagnose the case. The isolation of any bird not in the best of condition will prevent the spread of any disease through the the National Capital rest of the flock and often save the poultryman hundreds of dollars,

Poultry Hints Keep young turkey poults separate from chickens and from old turkeys. The American standard of perfection recognizes twelve classes, fortyfive breeds and one hundred and twenty-seven varieties of chickens. Delaying the housing of pullets until they are well started laying is one of the main causes of winter and fall molt, a disastrous blow to winter egg production.

One of the major needs in the poultry industry is widespread education on disease prevention.

It is best to make the poultry house as airtight as possible in order to conserve the greatest amount of heat during cold weather.

Tuberculosis of fowls is a chronic, infectious disease resembling tubercuiosis of other animals and man. In Washington held his levees and re- some sections of the country it is ceptions with all the formality of a called spotted liver or liver complaint. . . .

It is not advisable to hold eggs for hatching purposes more than ten days before putting them in the incubator.

Recent studies in Ohio indicate that the chick ration should contain at least 2 per cent of calcium carbonate in order to give the best bone growth.

To clean soiled eggs use a knife or steel wool to remove the greater part of the dirt. Then wipe the eggs clean with a damp cloth. Washed eggs do not keep well

-7-Edith said, "I've really got to go. I'm helping mother now, you know, with the house work and I haven't done a thing today. Good-by!"

She was trembling. The tears would show in her eyes in another minute. She got out of that house as fast as

It must have been Ed who telephoned. If it had been anyone else, Agatha would have told her who it was. She must have told him he had to go right after lunch. That was why she hadn't been surprised when he rushed off like that. But she'd told him he could come back after his sister had gone. She was probably to have telephoned him but he hadn't He'd said, "Has she gone yet?" That was when Agatha had said "No." He'd asked how much longer she was going to stay, and Agatha had said she didn't know. And then he'd asked Agatha-he must have-to tell Edith she had another engagement, and Agatha had said of course she wouldn't and told him not to be silly.

But she hadn't cared, really. She was telephoning him now, that the coast was clear and that he could come. Edith knew it as well as if she'd heard the whole thing.

She didn't quarrel openly either with Agatha or with Ed. She even forbore to inquire whether she had grounds for a quarrel and so kept y that she'd misin terpreted that telephone call. With each of them separately she had some couple that Ed and Agatha made her

Assuming that Ed had to get silly about a girl and Agatha about a boy, she'd have thought it better that they turn toward each other than that they should drag in a pair of outsiders, but she didn't believe now that she'd have minded the latter alternative so much. There was something subtly infuriating about a relation between those two which left her out. It seemed like a

It was perfectly terrible the way Ed's engagements kept him running around. From the time he got up, along toward noon, until he came home to bed at some unknown small hour in the morning, they never saw him at all, except when he dashed home to change his clothes. Dad, she could see, was getting pretty sore about it, though it was several days before he said anything.

But one night at dinner, two or three days after Christmas, he blew up. They expected Ed to be at home for that meal and had a place set for him, but he didn't appear. "I don't know what to make of the boy," Dad said. "Last summer I thought he showed signs of being a man. He worked hard; he acted like a responsible being. Now he shows no signs of responsibility for anything or consideration of anybody. He's neglecting Edith, going off to parties that she's not included in. He makes extra work for you, getting special meals for him and so on-and he knows that you and Edith have to do it all—and he doesn't even pretend to take an interest in my concerns. You'd think that ordinary curiosity and self-interest, even if he has no natural affection for me, would lead him to come and see what we're doing. If this is what college does for him, I doubt if it's worth the sacrifice. I don't feel like sacrificing you and Edith for him, and that's the

It was funny that mother didn't speak in Ed's defense. After a while Edith said, "If you mean the Malverns' party, I don't think Ed neglected me. I think it would be silly for him to stay home just because I wasn't asked. He said if I wanted to go, he'd get Agatha to ask them to invite me, and I told him I didn't want to go. So you don't have to worry about me. 1 don't feel as if I was being sacrificed." But her defense didn't have the result she'd looked for. Dad's face twitched with pain. He looked as if he might be going to cry. In a panic she turned from him to mother. There were tears in mother's eyes. Edith pushed back her chair, gripping the edge of the table with both hands. "I can't stand it," she said. "I just can't stand it! I know something perfectly horrible's going to happen that I don't know about. I want it to happen and get it over. It's just rotten, like this. I'm sorry, mother, I don't want any more dinner." She managed to hold back the sob into the hall. She fled upstairs to her room where she could cry as much as she liked and where, by virtue of that fact, it was much easier not to, She turned on the light, looked at herself dispassionately in the mirror and wiping away the two incipient tears proceeded to pull herself together. She'd made a good start at this when, at the sound of mother's step on the stair, her heart turned to lead.

Mother hadn't finished dinner, either. She'd never have left dad to come to her unless-unless that random shot about something horrible that was about to happen had hit the mark. There was something. There really was. She cried, as her mother appeared in the doorway, "You've come up to tell me what it is!"

Mother nodded, but before she said anything she came across the room and sat down on the edge of the bed. "It isn't a life-or-death matter," she said, "It isn't anything that need make any real difference, except . . ." But it seemed, she couldn't go on with

"I suppose dad's business has failed." Edith said dully. "Is that it?"

This seemed to help mother out. "No, it isn't that at all. It isn't nearly as bad as that. In some ways the business looks better than it did. Only it does reed more money to get it started than your father thought it would. He thinks he could get some one else, Agatha's father, perhaps, to put money in, as an investment. But that would mean giving him a share in the business. Just as Mr. Mariner had to give dad a share. So instead of doing that, he's decided to borrow the money himself, and put it in. And, besides, that will give him the control, instead of Mr. Mariner. But borrowing the money, as he'll have to do it, means that we must help him by saving every penny that we possibly can.'

"I thought we were doing that, already," Edith said,

"We can save several hundred dollars," mother said, in a scared sort of voice, "by changing your school; sending you to high school for the last half-year, where there isn't any tuition to pay. Your tuition is paid for the first half-year-up to February first. if you were going on, so you see we must decide now. As far as education goes, the high school is as good as the other. You know we sent Ed there for the whole four years. It's only. . . Oh, I know, it will be hard! Dad knows, too. He didn't see it at first, but since the play and all. . . . It makes him almost sick to ask it of you. He wouldn't do it now, if it weren't that Linsisted. But the three hundred dollars will make such a difference to him, just at this time-to really good times. It was only as a all of us. . . . I want you to go down and tell him, that it isn't going to make you unhappy. Will you do that,

Mother was holding out her arms. inviting her to come to them and be comforted, but the girl ignored the gesture and went and sat down, stolidly, in a chair where her face would be turned away. Just now she felt perfectly numb and she wanted to keep on feeling that vay as long as she could. The one thing she couldn't bear would be to have mother go on talking to her in that encouraging be-a-goodgirl voice. She'd have to say something, aerself.

"Oh, it's all right of course." She didn't mean her voice to sound as hateful as that, but she couldn't help it. "I don't mind not going back to school so much. You can tell him that. I suppose I could stay around home and help you, more. Or perhaps I could get a job. Mother, I don't have to go to Martha's party, tonight, do I? I just-couldn't. You can tell Ed, when he comes home, that I've gone to bed with a headache. He won't mind going without me, that's a cinch. And I'll really go to bed. I guess I'll go now.'

For a minute she was afraid that mother would try to "reason" with her; try to talk about unselfishness and sacrifice and things like that, but if that had been what she meant to do, she changed her mind, for she got up and walked to the door. From there, she said, "All right, I'll tell Ed."

A spurt of unpremeditated anger made the girl say, "I suppose that three hundred dollars will mean a lot to him. He can go on living at his fraternity house and having all the fun there is."

She was aghast over the words as she neard herself saying them, but mother didn't give her time to try to take them back. She just shut the door behind her, quietly, and went away. Edith put out the light and undressed in the dark. Already the headache was no mere pretext. It would be a relief to cry, but she

Mother was in her room putting on her wraps. So it wasn't possible, though Edith didn't feel like speaking a word to anybody that morning, to go by down the hall without stopping.

"I'm just off to the Guild lunch," mother explained. "It's the last meeting of the year and I can't get out of it very well. I was going to push a note under your door, and then I heard you moving about. Your breakfast is all ready except making the toast and boiling up the coffee."

"I suppose I'll have to get something for Ed when he comes down," Edith remarked.

But mother offered the surprising information that Ed had got up early that morning and gone out. She kissed her daughter briefly and was gone. It wasn't more than a minute before the front door shut behind her. Thank goodness, she hadn't tried to talk about last night. The girl said | that's what she'd do. She was listen- "Translation of the Iliad."

that was coming until she had got out I that very definitely to herself and yet she wasn't quite sincere about it. Anyhow, she was glad Ed was out of the way. It was a comfort to have the house all to herself. " She didn't want any breakfast, but she might as well go down and get it over with. Then she could settle down and really decide what she was going to do.

She hadn't been able to do that last night. The thought of the bunch getting together next week in classes, teams, committees-the whole fabric of a life that had been hers going on with her torn out of it-had hurt her unbearably. The thing for her to do was to make up her own mind while solitude still gave her the chance. Already it was half made up. She knew what she wasn't going to do. She wasn't going to high school. They couldn't make her.

She noted with reluctant satisfaction that mother had cleared and reset the dining room table for her solitary meal, with the electric toaster beside her place ready to do its duty. She went into the kitchen and lighted the flame under the coffee pot; then came back and started the toast.

The doorbell rang just as she'd turned on the current in the toaster.

Once More She Was Struck Speechless. "Did-Did You Do it?" She

She said, "Good morning," and automatically stepped back from the pitiless betrayal of that glare of light. It was too late to do any good, of course. One glance would have been enough to show him how perfectly horrible she looked. Her eyes swollen with last night's crying; her hair a mess; and then that beastly old serge skirt with spots all over it! It was almost too horrible to be true. And she'd only made matters worse by retreating into the hall, for he'd taken that, naturally, as an invitation to

"Oh, I'm sorry 1 missed him," Roger said. "but it doesn't matter. You can say good-by to him for me. Mother and I decided at breakfast this morning that we'd go to New York for two or three days before college opens, so we're leaving on the afternoon train. But I'm :wfully glad I found you. I thought I'd see you at Martha's party last night. I asked Ed why you weren't there, and he told me you weren't feeling well. I hope you're better this morning."

"Oh, I'm fine," she said. "It was just a headache."

"Well then," he said, "if you're not busy, won't you let me come in for a few minutes? I've been wanting a chance to talk with you ever since the night of the play. Really, you know-" He broke off short and sniffed. His look fixed itself over her shoulder, upon the door into the dining room. "Isn't something burning?" he

In the same instant she smelled it too. "The toast!" she cried, and fled. He came along, too, of course, anxious to help, though there wasn't a thing he could do. The room was full of smoke and the toast was charred black and stuck to the wires.

She was busy for a minute removing the debris, and when she next looked up at him, he was in the act of disappearing into the kitchen. She'd caught her breath to ask him what he was doing that for, when the smell of gas answered the question for her. The coffee pot must have boiled over and put out the flame. She got to the kitchen door in time to see him at the stove turning off the gas. It seemed to her just then that a coffee pot which has boiled over was the most disgusting sight in the world. It was one calamity too many; more than she could stand. She started to say "Oh, never mind. Let it alone," but her voice wouldn't work. She felt the tears coming up into her eyes. She reached for her handkerchief and found she hadn't any. Flight was the only thing. She bolted through the dining room, down the hall, and upstairs to her room. She didn't know whether the "Excuse me" she'd flung back to him had been audible or not.

She didn't care, She stripped off the beastly blouse and skirt. She'd go back to bed, ing for the opening and shutting of the front door that should tell her he'd gone. Why didn't he go? She stood staring at her tear-stained face in the mirror. Mechanically, with about three swift movements, she rearranged her hair. She went into the bathroom and washed her race in cold water. He hadn't gone yet. Or had he, after all, without her having

She slipped into a plain little house dress and fortified herself with a handkerchief and with another look in the mirror. Anger over the revolting series of petty disasters had dried her tears and restored her color. He had gone of course. He must have by this time, Anyhow, she'd go down and see.

He was in the dining room. The smoke and the smell of gas were gone. The coffee pot, wiped clean, stood on its tile upon the table.

"Just on the minute." he said with glance that seemed to take in nothing but the fact that she was there. 'Your toast is done to a turn."

Once more she was struck speechless. "Did-did you do it?" she stammered.

"It seemed the least I could do after having ruined your other breakfast by coming to make a call in the middle of the morning." Unexpectedly the girl laughed. She didn't know why, unless because there was something so deliciously matterof-fact about his voice. "I might have known you'd spot that extra cup first thing," he said. He had put on another cup, meaning that was why she had laughed. She was conscious of a passing wonder whether he really was like that or whether he was just pretending. Didn't he know that she had cried and run away? "Yes, it was a nice party, I guess. didn't stay very long. Martha's my cousin, you know, so I checked in and danced with her; smoked a cigarette with Ed when he happened not to be dancing, and did a quiet fade-out,"

She thrilled at that. If he'd said he she wouldn't have believed it. The mere fact that he didn't say it made it possible. He was talking with only half his mind, anyway, thinking about something else.

"You know," he said at last, "it's awfully good of you to let me get by with this. You're Ed's sister and I'm his oldest friend, and that creates a sort of presumption that I know you well enough to drop in on you in the morning and invite myself to breakfast. But it's perfectly phony. I really don't know you a bit. When you came out of the house on the way to the play the other night-the night I brought Ed home- I didn't even Edith. I'd always thought of you as his little sister."

"I must have looked awfully silly," she said, "dressed up like that, when you didn't know what it was for."

He frowned at her in a puzzled sort of way, which she found completely adorable. She loved people who didn't smile all the time,

"Dressed up?" he echoed. "You mean you were in costume for the play? I didn't notice it. There was a sort of romantic look about you in your big cloak and all, but I guess I was too surprised to take in details." "Did you like the play?" she asked.

"Ed told me you were there." Again he frowned. "Was that all he told you?"

"I guess he said you liked it," she

"Well, there's a case of wasted eloquence for you!" he said. "I talked my head off to him for half an hour, about how good you were. It was probably just as well he didn't try to pass it on, though."

"I was scared sick!" she told him. "Well, then," he pronounced, after a stare of surprise, "you must be a real actrecs, that's all I've got to

There was nothing she could say to that, so she buttered her second slice of toast. He got up and began roaming up and down the room.

"Even so, I don't understand it," he went on. "I don't understand your being one of them-Martha, and Jane Cole, and Isabel Norris and the rest of the bunch. Don't they seem like kids to you? I should think that anybody-well, anybody who could play that screen scene, for instance, the way you played it-would find the rest of them awfully-young." "Oh, I don't know," she said. Really, she didn't. She hadn't the least idea what he meant about the screen scene. But the next moment she heard herself saying, "Anyhow, I'm going to stop school. I'm not going back next term."

He nodded as if it didn't surprise him very much, but he didn't interrupt with any comment, and somehow father," L. C. Gentle, seventy, father she had to go on. She just couldn't of 29 children, was killed here by a stop herself. "I haven't made up my switch engine at a railroad crossmind what to do exactly. Take a job, ing. I guess." At the sound of the words she was seized with a panic. What would he say? What would he do? What would he think of her for blurting out a thing like that? "Really, it's what I'd have expected you to do if I'd thought of it. It's a aboard. sporting proposition, you see, and anyone could tell you were a good sport from the way you played that part." He took another turn across the room. Then, "What does Ed think about it?" he asked.

"He doesn't know," she told him. passed, 120 to 45, by parlia "He doesn't even know I'm going to ment. stop school."

SANTIAGO IS STRUCK BY SEVERE QUAKES

Cuban City Badly Damaged; Loss of Life Is Small.

Santiago, Cuba.-Early estimates of the casualties in a series of earthquakes which struck this city were found to be too high with the issuance of an official announcement placing the number of dead at six and the number of injured at thirty.

Property damage was extensive and few buildings escaped unscathed.

The first shock, shortly after 1 o'clock in the morning, affected only the business district, but word of the quake spread quickly and threw the city into a panic. Immediately there came a flood of rumors which said 1,500 had been killed and at least as many more injured. When cooler hands took hold the list of casualties melted away. Mayor Aznar ordered the gas and electric services shut off to prevent fire and sent word to Havana that the local authorities could handle the Nevertheless United States Ambassador Guggenheim started from Havana by air, a number of other government officials headed for Santiago and relief organizations mobilized their facilities. In quick succession lighter shocks followed the first. The walls of the jail fell in, but most of the inmates to have coffee with her. He thought escaped and those who were not hurt went to work with the police and such troops as were available, cleaning up the debris and standing guard to prevent the looting of wrecked buildings. The two tall towers of the imposing cathedral were thought to have been cracked and it was feared they might topple into the street. The machinery of rescue and rehabilitation was placed in full operation, even before the successive shocks, which fortunately showed lessening intensity, were over. The military took complete control of the more seriously injured to hospitals and improvised emergency stations in abandoned homes.

As dawn brought realization of the extent of the ruin spread throughout the building city, plans were already heading eastward with medical supplies for the stricken inhabitants of left early because she wasn't there, the town which had not known such terror since it was bombarded by United States warships in 1898.

Finance Corporation Board Begins Its Big Loan Work

Washington.-The Reconstruction Finance corporation officially started upon its duties with a forecast from one of its officials that loans would be going forward very shortly.

Charles Gates Dawes, president of the corporation; Jesse H. Jones of Houston, Texas, and Harvey C. Couch of Pine Bluff, Ark., took the oath of office as directors. Eugene Meyer, chairman of the board of directors; know who you were for a minute; not Paul Bestor, member as chairman of till Ed hugged you and called you the Federal Farm Loan bureau, and treasury, did not take the oath, as they already were government officials. The board went into session behind locked doors immediately the oath was administered. Wilson McCarthy of Salt Lake City, the other director appointed, was not present. He had not yet been confirmed by the senate,

Just before going to the corporation's headquarters Mills said that there would be an immediate organization of the board, followed closely by actual loan-making activities.

WASHINGTON BRIEFS

A bill exempting building and loan associations from being adjudged involuntary bankrupts was passed by the house.

Headed by Governor Meier, members of the Washington and Oregon congressional delegation, accompanied by power experts, urged the army board of engineers to recommend development of the Columbia river project from The Dalles to Snake river.

Treasury department figures reveal that 1931 tobacco taxes totaled $424,-532,735.25, a negligible decline from the $446,156,354.67 total of 1930. Playing eard taxes for 1931 amounted to $4,868,390.90, little change from the previous year's total of $4,789,541.70.

Pensions to nondisabled war veterans were sternly frowned upon in a report of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States by a special committee investigating the government costs. The report put government pensions at $1,013,041,905 for the fiscal year 1931, one-ninth of the total pensions in all the rest of American history.

The senate approved the $125,000,-000 appropriation for increasing the capitalization of the federal land

Tighest Paid Short Fiction Writer

FANNIE HURST is the highest paid short story writer in the world today. There's a good reason for that. She knows human nature and under the magic of her touch, the people about whom she writes become real people, not mere literary creations. The plots of her stories are based on incidents from real life as it is lived every day by the common people.

Such are the stories which are appearing in this newspaper Be sure to read them and talk to your friends about them, for they like interesting stories, too. And Fannie Hurst's stories are interesting stories.

Baraboo-The federal district court at Madison has awarded damages of $17,861.96 to a Milwaukee concern against the Humane Stanchion Works of Baraboo in a suit for patent infringement

Madison-More than 100 telephones have been removed from offices at the University of Wisconsin as part of an economy program. The removal is expected to save approximately $3,000 annually.

Oconto-Following recommendations made by Mayor Riggins, the Oconto city council cut salaries of city officers 10 per cent, and also advanced an ordinance which reduces the number of wards from ten to five.

Madison - Representative members of the Wisconsin Equity, Progressive Farmers of Wisconsin, and the Farm Bureau Federation will meet here March 31 to sign incorporation papers consolidating the three groups.

Madison-Hearing of the suit before the supreme court brought by the Wisconsin Allied Truck Operators' association to test the constitutionality of the ton mile tax law has been deferred, with March 15 set as a tentative date for presenting arguments.

Merrill-Harry F. Brownell, a former high school boy and newspaper reporter of this city, has become a candidate for U. S. senator in South Dakota, where he operates a chain of forty-two oil service stations. Brownell is now rated as a millionaire.

Green Bay-The annual state open basketball tournament, sponsored by the Y. M. C. A., will be held here April 1 and 2. District tournaments will be held March 25 at Racine, Milwaukee, Beloit, Madison, Eau Claire, La Crosse, Wausau, Sheboygan and Appleton.

Peshtigo-The Badger Paper Mills of this city announces that all employes of the concern will cease their voluntary 1 per cent contribution of salary for unemployment relief, because of the recent state emergency unemployment relief taxation measure.

Madison-Jobs for unemployed lumberjacks in seventeen northern Wisconsin counties will be provided through the $500,000 forestry appropriation in the $8,000,000 state tax bill. It is planned to use the money for construction of fire roads and lanes.

Madison-With fewer than 1,500 students in the grand march, the annual junior promenade, the University of Wisconsin's outstanding social event of the year, was held Feb. 5 in the Memorial Union building. The depression dimmed the 1932 prom to little more than a shadow of its former brilliance.

Manitowoc-The bodies of Leo Wanek, 21, and Marvin Luedtke, 17, both of Maribel, who had been missing for five days, were found in the Manitowoc river here. They had plunged into the stream in Wanek's automobile and drowned in nine feet of water. The youths disappeared after leaving a rural dance where they had played in the orchestra.

Madison-Livestock breeders of Wisconsin held annual meetings here in connection with farm and home week at the University of Wisconsin. B. B. Stevens, Oconomowoc, was elected president of the Wisconsin Guernsey Breeders' association and G. B. Riedal, Phillips, was re-elected to head the Wisconsin Jersey Breeders' association. Mrs. J. E. Bowen, Barron, was e-elected president by the women of the Guernsey association.

Beloit-Not a reactor was found among 170 beef cattle tested for tuberculosis by state veterinarians in the 800-acre farm of Charles Northrup, near Clinton. For years Northrup had refused to permit the tuberculin test to be applied to his stock, which lived in the open the year around, and his herd finally became the only one in the state that had not been tested. The cattle were rounded up in rodeo style by a crew of local farmers.

Madison-The special session of the Wisconsin legislature, which began Nov. 24, came to an end Feb. 5 with the sine die adjournment. No measures were enacted during the final week, only skeleton organizations of both houses remaining in the capital for routine work. The day following adjournment, Gov. La Follette returned from a lecture tour in the middle west and signed the $8,000,000 unemployment relief bill, the measures for congressional and legislative reapportionments and the act authorizing the emergency board to cut budgets of state departments 20 per cent.

Madison-A school economy program is asked by the Wisconsin Teachers' association to permit maintenance of present salary levels for instructors in Wisconsin schools. A special committee recommended elimination of unnecessary expenses in schools, to allow budget reductions without decreases in teaching staffs or teachers' salaries.

Wisconsin Rapids-The city council refused to reduce salaries of city workers, as recommended by the mayor, and raised the pay of the city treasurer from $1,000 to $1,500 annually.

Elkhorn-Alfred Olson, local woodworker, has received an order from Speaker Garner of the national house of representatives for a special unbreakable gavel carved out of black walnut and treated by Olson's special "shrunkenwood" process. Olson is confident that it will check the speaker's penchant for breaking gavels.

Manitowoc-Every city employe here is asked to contribute 3 to 20 per cent of his salary to poor relief and unemployment measures, in a resolution presed by the common council.

Edgerton-Fire totally destroyed the ocal Congregational church, a structure built in 1890.

Baraboo-Sidney J. Hood, 67, editor of a daily newspaper here for thirtyfive years, was found dead in his printing office.

Madison-Up to Feb. 1 the secretary of state had received approximately $5,000,000 in fees for 1932 licenses on about 300,000 Wisconsin automobiles.

Portage-Frank P. Lawton of this city has been appointed deputy fire marshal and supervisor of the state fire and life insurance funds.

Appleton-Miss Etta H. Handy, for nine years directo. of the Stanford Union at Stanford university, has been appointed director of dormitories at Lawrence college.

Eau Claire-Charles Petzold, 85, Civil war veteran and second oldest Odd Fellow in Wisconsin in length of membership, is dead. He was an Odd Fellow for 65 years.

Green Bay-The Wisconsin conference of Catholic women will hold its annual convention here May 11 and 12. More than 185 delegates from 63 clubs are expected to attend.

Reedsburg - In a special election, Reedsburg citizens approved issuance of $50,000 in bonds for a municipal hospital by a vote of five to one. About 1,200 votes were cast, the most ever recorded here.

Madison - Gov. La Follette has signed the bill making $5,000,000 in relief funds available this year instead of next. The bill applies to funds granted to municipalities from gasoline tax collections.

Waukesha-Lake property near here owned by Herbert Ripley, wealthy Chi. sung, twelve miles from Shanghai; cago contractor, has been attached by a physician in a suit for $10,000, an amount claimed due on a bill of $25,-000 for an operation for appendicitis.

Kenosha - Kenosha dairymen are seeking a ban on the sale of raw milk. that unpasteurized milk was being sold warned that disease might spread if first. The Japanese and Chinese comthe practice was not halted.

Madison - The public service commission has appointed five of the group ton mile tax law. They are: G. T. Leahy, Beloit; Davis W. Swartz, Wauwatosa; Oscar F. Heyer, Superior; Richard H. Kroll, Eau Claire, and James H. Sullivan, Portage.

Madison-Four outstanding men and one woman were honored Feb. 2 at annual services given in appreciation of their work in behalf of the rural residents by the farm and home week agriculture. They are: Alexander from drowning. Legge, Chicago, former chairman of the federal farm board; A. J. Glover, American Dairymen's association; James Christian Hansen, Dane county pioneer in the field of marketing; Vera Constance Rehnstrand, Douglas county, a leader in rural school teaching, and M. J. Wallrich, Shawano, a community leader.

Whitehall-Christine Odde Liebeck, 76, who recently died near here, had a flock of thirty chickens roosting in one room of her 12x14 house, while four dogs lived with her in the other room that was only five feet in width. Two of the dogs had to be shot before the undertaker could gain possession of the hermit's body.

Waupun-Edwin Seger, 26, a convicted slayer who escaped from the prison farm near Hancock, surrendered to farm authorities after four days of around the bust and hips and 26 liberty.

Milwaukee - Two Indian brothers, Tom and Jim Wishkene, are under indictment by the federal grand jury on charges of stealing dynamite from a government storehouse on the Menominee reservation in Langlade county. They are accused of selling the explosive to white settlers at Mattoon,

Gresham and Red Springs.

Sheboygan-The Sheboygan County Mutual Savings bank was reopened Feb. 1. It closed a year ago after Hugo Dardierer, now in Waupun prison, had misappropriated funds.

JAPAN TURNS DOWN PEACE PROPOSALS

Mellon Quits Treasury

to Be Envoy to London Washington.-After eleven years as ecretary of the treasury under three Presidents, Andrew W. Mellon has given up his portfolio to become ambassador to the Court of St. James.

President Hoover announced the veteran cabinet officer, who has guided the nation's financial policies since the beginning of the Harding administration, had expressed his willingness to serve in the foreign field.

In recent months Mr. Mellon has left an increasing share of the treasury responsibility to Ogden L. Mills, undersecretary, in recognition of which fact congress authorized the undersecretary to act as his alternate as a member of the Reconstruction Finance corporation. Mr. Mills was named to succeed Mr. Mellon as secretary.

Cavalry Regiment Bids Its Horses Farewell

Marfa, Texas.—Hard riding veterans of the First cavalry detechment said farewell to their horses with a formal parade and fanfare of military music. With "Old Louie," the regiment's oldest horse, in a position of honor, the horses, soon to be replaced by armored cars, were placed in a long picket line. Led by a brass band, the regiment filed past. As each company came abreast of "Old Louie," each officer snapped to salute and the soldiers marched past with "eyes right."

FARM BOARD INQUIRY WOULD DELAY BILLS

Equalization and Debenture to Be Campaign Topics.

Washington.-With an investigation of the farm board by a joint congressional committee in prospect, it is becoming probable that the enactment of legislation on such subjects as the equilization fee or the export debenture will go over until the next ses-

This postponement of action will mean that the question of enlargement of the powers of the farm board to invoke either of these two schemes for dealing with the crop surpluses will remain a matter for discussion in the Presidential campaign. The leading farm organizations have joined forces in a move to add both the equalization fee, the pet scheme of the American Farm Bureau federation, and the export debenture, sponsored by the National Grange, to the farm board act as optional relief measures. If they fail to get legislation this winter they will seek inclusion of planks dealing with the subject in the party platforms at the Republic and Democratic conventions in Chicago in June and again try to inject the farm relief question into the

Originally it was the intention of the senate committee on agriculture to launch an investigation of the farm board, extending it also to the grain exchanges and other marketing machinery. The house committee on agriculture also showed interest and appointed a subcommittee of the senate committee. The two groups have been working out a program for an investigation by a joint committee.

If the joint investigation is held it will occupy many months and will not be completed in time to make recommendations available for use in the enactment of legislation in the present session.

Railway Unions Accept 10 Per Cent Wage Cut

Chicago. - In an atmosphere of solemnity and hope the formal pact by which a million and a half railway cordingly. employees voluntarily accept a 10 per cent wage reduction was signed by the presidents of 20 unions and a committee of railroad presidents representing the carriers.

The pact provides that railway labor will accept the 10 per cent pay cut for one year, beginning February 1. The deduction will be made from each pay check on every pay day, but the basic or legal wage will not be disturbed and the full rates will be restored on January 31, 1933. A separate agreement, in which the railroads made certain concessions along the lines of a program proposed by labor for the betterment of working conditions and the relief of unemployment, was signed simultaneously with the wage pact.

Two Die in Blizzard on Mount Washington

Twin Mountain, N. H .- Two youths who braved blizzard-swept Mount Washington in subzero weather perished more than half way up the mountainside while a third crawled on hands and knees from the summit to the base station after he was forced to abandon his companions when they succumbed to cold and toppled from the cogwheel railroad trestle.

Donald Higgins, twenty-three, Winchester, Mass., youth, struggled against the storm after he was forced to release his grasp on his two friends, first Ernest McAdams, honor senior at Tufts college, then Joseph Chadwick of Woburn. With difficulty he made the ascent, rested without food or fire in the shelter of the summit house and crawled down to collapse at the base.

Canadian, Decorated by Lincoln in Civil War, Dies

Vancouver, B. C .- Newton Wolverton, native born Canadian who was decorated by Abraham Lincoln for bravery in the Civil war, died here at the age of eighty-six. Wolverton left Canada and enlisted with the northern forces at fifteen. He later became a captain. When Lincoln was assassinated, Wolverton helped to trail John Wilkes Booth, with whom he was acquainted. Alice Wolverton, a daughter, lives in Vineland, N. J.

Communists Disturb Gary Council: Two Are Arrested

Gary, Ind .- A man and a woman were arrested after a group of communists, refused permission by the city council to hold a mass meeting, created a disturbance in the council chamber, Those seized were Mrs. Alice Burke, twenty-two, of Gary, and Steve Petroff, forty-two, of Canton, Ohio, who, police said, resisted efforts to oust them.

MISSING!

A woman came out of a store laden with the parcels she had collected during a busy morning's shopping. She called a taxi and placed the parcels on the seats, counting them as she did so. "That makes ten," she said, with satisfaction, "and George has lost the bet he made with me that I should not arrive home with the whole of the goods I had bought." Then she counted the lot again, and a look of doubt came into her face, "There still seems to be something missing," she said, and then, after a pause, she gasped: "I know what it is-it's baby!"

Comes Now Urge to Buy New Hat

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

AS HAS been and always will be straw braid will be very fashionable. which a winter-weary woman makes toward spring is to buy a new hat. Seeking signs of spring, fashion's followers will find their fondest hopes realized in the realm of new millinery where milady's chapeau has blossomed forth ere snows have melted from the ground, in full regalia of flowers, ribbons and refreshing straws. Which may be taken literally for more flowers are being used than is usual for this time of the year, and straws of every description are flourishing at such a rate as to lead those who watch "which way the wind blows" to prophesy that it is to be a "straw sea-

The new shapes are thrilling. So different! So far as the beret, the sailor and the cloche are concerned, they are staging a sort of all-star performance. All three are in the limelight with, however, startling varia-

High spots on the millinery program are, first of all, the tendency of brims to turn up at the back. Even the familiar cloche makes itself look new by turning its brim up flat to its crown at the back (see the cloche pictured in lower right corner of the illustra-

Then, too, hats must be worn at an angle. As to the jaunty beret, it simply clings to one side of the head, and how it stays on is often a mystery, yet not such a mystery, for, believe it or not, hatpins are "in" again. That is. some of the smartest berets made of midseason) are held in place on the head with two pearl-knobbed pins thrust through the crown. Then, again, the popular quill trimming, as the first model in the picture shows, is preferred. So flat are many of these little hats, they are called pancake berets. Many of them are made of satin ribbon, others of fabric, especially black satin, while those of hand-sewed in midseason, the first gesture | The toque or beret with a peak is also exploited. In fact, the peaked crown is a favorite topic among designers. Brims are taken for granted this season. They excite interest in that their contours are so unusual. A favorite among youthful fashions is what is called the "baby brim," which turns up all around in an even cuff. The hat at the top, to the right in this group, is a version of this new mode. Note the upright positioning of the feather trim. High effects like this express a trend which is being greatly emphasized. The straw sailor worn with a lilt and a tilt is outstanding for spring. The model centered in the picture is of black straw. Paris hats declare a vogue for rough shiny straws and for lustrous cellophane effects. Of the sailor here illustrated, it may be said that it has a very conservative pose. In some instances the brim is worn at such an angle that it would seem As a "last word" hat fashion, we call attention to the pert little shape shown in the lower left corner of the picture. It is one of the Louis Seize models which you will be hearing much about the coming season. Its characteristics are its shallow crown, the narrowness of its brim and, most important of all, the upturn of this brim at the back. Imagine this model in straw or in felt, for it is shown in black satin (ever so good looking for | both. Sometimes it is banked in at bon bows are massed in a way to fill in the space over the coiffure. Smart Parisiennes are wearing these little coquettish shapes at a daring angle. It remains to be seen how popular the very shallow crowns will become with American women. Watteau bandeaux hats are very much in fashion.

They carry many future fashion secrets on their delicate wings, not alone for colors, but for the gracefulness of their slender bodies, and the exquisite combinations of shades and nulances that they seem to have captured while hovering over myriads of brilliant flowers.

Watch the blues carefully and note the delicacy of change in the tones that you find. These same elusive shades will be found in your spring frocks. There will be hints of periwinkle, of dusty sapphires, and of amethysts behind blue mists.

Pick Winter Additions to wear under your winter coat, then select something you can wear later without that coat. A dress that has the earmarks of a coat dress is the thing to choose, and see to it that this dress is in a springlike color and fabric. Silk serge that looks like wool, or wool serge that looks more like satin would be the smartest choice for such a frock.

Seasonable Suggestions About Fashions

Bibs for grownups are a new fashion note.

Suede hats in bright colors look fine with dark fur coats.

A new bolero scarf has sleeves. It looks a little like the old-time "hug-metight."

Woolens, treated so as to be snow proof and resembling fluffy flannel, are among the season's new heavy sports naterials.

Straight up in the air is the newest way for hat trimming to go. To wear with fur collared coats nothing quiet takes the place of a close little turban. Dresses which are worn out in spots sometimes can be made into charming blouses. Chanel's revival of the Eton jacket is expecetd to result in a return of interest in tuck-in blouses.

Mercolized Wax Keeps Skin Young

Millions Thrown Away

by Wasteful Methods How much water is wasted by a dripping tap? An answer was provided when New York decided to levy a fine of two dollars for every tap found leaking. In two years 40,000,-000 gallons of water were saved. It seems absurd to worry about the amount of steam wasted when a locomotive blows a whistle. But Doctor Foley of Indiana university has calculated that 2,434,026 tons of coal are consumed annually in generating steam to blow United States locomo tive whistles, and that if the whistles were moved slightly forward and adapted to a single high-pitched note, more than 1,000,000 pounds a year could be saved. But this loss is small compared with that involved in throwing into the dustbin cinders that would still give a lot of heat. It is estimated that a third of the cinders thrown away retain from 50 to 70 per cent of their heating value.

"Lucile is the Happiest Girl"

So many mothers nowadays talk about giving their children fruit juices, as if this were a new discovery. As a matter of fact, for over fifty years, mothers have been accomplishing results far surpassing anything you can secure from home prepared fruit juices, by using pure, wholesome California Fig Syrup, which is prepared under the most exacting laboratory supervision from ripe California Figs, richest of all fruits in laxative and nourishing properties.

It's marvelous to see how bilious, weak, feverish, sallow, constipated, under-nourished children respond to its gentle influence; how their breath clears up, color flames in their cheeks, and they become sturdy, playful, energetic again. A Western mother, Mrs. H. J. Stoll, Valley P. O., Nebraska, says: "My little daughter, Roma Lucile, was constipated from babyhood. I became worried about her and decided to give her some California Fig Syrup. It stopped her constipation quick; and the way it improved her color and made her pick up made me realize how rundown she had been. She is so sturdy and well now, and always in such good humor that neighbors say she's the happiest girl in the West." Like all good things, California Fig Syrup is imitated, but you can always get the genuine by looking for the name "California" on the carton.
