Mr. Schmidt was visiting his father on a nearby farm and when proceeding to leave for his own home, saw a car slowly moving, turning into the yard of his own farm. Becoming suspicious he rapidly ran home and saw the two men loading a calf in their automobile. When the thieves saw him they jumped in the car and started driving away. Mr. Schmidt hopped on the car, but got off when the men threatened to shoot him. He had foresight enough, however, to recognize the license number of the car and reported same to the sheriff. ### THE PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS

We don't know who the happiest man on earth is, but we know who the unhappiest people are. They are the people who thought they could buy happiness with money and who, now that their sources of money have dried up, find themselves thrown upon their own resources, and have discovered that those resources are not sufficient to bring them happiness.

We confess to a considerable degree of indignation when we hear people advising young folks to buy this, that or the other thing, because it will make them happy. We think there are very few commodities, and those very inexpensive ones, that can make any material contribution to individual happiness. Possession may enlarge one's sense of self-importance. Money may enable people to do things which give temporary pleasure. But the idea that the rich are happier than the poor is just as false now as it always has been.

We think one of the real benefits of these hard times to many people has been that it has forced them to develop their inward resources and depend upon their own efforts for happiness. We have certainly heard much more complaining from people who still have a good deal of money left than we have heard from people who didn't have much of anything to lose. The man or woman who has learned in childhood to get along with little is far better adapted to face the realities of life than the one who has been able to buy whatever pleased his or her fancy. Those are the unhappy ones today, the ones who cannot spend money as they used to spend, while the happy ones are those who never had any money to spend.

HOT BATTLE FOR G.O.P. DELEGATES

Wisconsin Regulars Likely to Gain 15 of 27 Conventional Seats—Roosevelt Democrats Win.

Milwaukee—Control of Wisconsin's delegation to the republican national convention is to be closely divided between the "regular" faction and the La Follette progressives, according to incomplete returns from the April 5 election.

Table listing delegates and their party affiliations: La Follette (Prog.) 117,697; Dammann (Prog.) 113,286; Blaine (Prog.) 109,977; Dahl (Reg.) 104,543; Mead (Reg.) 100,837; Dougherty (Reg.) 99,896; Schneller (Reg.) 98,062; Olson (Prog.) 98,495; Harding (Reg.) 94,288; Kletsch (Reg.) 92,881; Foss (Reg.) 92,674; Charbonneau (Reg.) 91,188; Gleiss (Prog.) 87,405.

Later returns, with 575 precincts missing, found Congressman Schneider of Appleton forging ahead of Frank J. Schneller, Neenah, the former gaining a lead of 248 votes out of more than 100,000.

If Schneller wins, the La Follette progressives will elect four of the seven delegates at large. Of the twenty district delegates, twelve are expected to be "regulars" and eight progressives, making the convention lineup stand fifteen to twelve in favor of the regulars.

In the democratic delegate contest, the candidates pledged to support Gov. Roosevelt of New York for the presidential nomination defeated the slate of uncommitted delegates that was destined to favor the candidacy of Albert E. Smith, Duffy led the Roosevelt candidates with 103,697 votes, while the leader on the uncommitted slate was Callahan with 77,234.

Judge Zimmerman Easy Winner. A. G. Zimmerman, circuit judge of the ninth district, composed of Dane and Sauk counties, has been re-elected for a six year term, leading Herman Sachjen by more than 6,000 votes with most of the precincts reported. Beck, agricultural commissioner, for violating a restraining order prohibiting the circulation of lists of oleo retailers.

Socialists Gain in Milwaukee. Daniel W. Hohn, socialist, who has acted as mayor of Milwaukee continuously since 1916, was re-elected by a vote of almost two to one over Carney, Socialist candidate for city treasurer and city attorney were also chosen to replace non-partisan incumbents and socialist candidates have won 11 of the 27 council seats. Madison—Action of the interstate commerce commission in ordering an investigation with regard to the emergency freight rate situation in Wisconsin is the result of an appeal by the railroads from the decision of the state public service commission allowing only a partial increase of freight rates in this state. The excess of outlay over revenue was greatest in the war years. In 1917 the deficit was $961,717,300. In 1918 the excess of expenditures was $9,611,482,000, and in 1919 came the record excess of $14,278,700,000. Last year's deficit was about $970,000,000.

TAX BILL CHANGES OFFERED BY MILLS

"Unjust" Levies, He Says, in House Measure.

Washington—Urging deletion from the house bill of over $170,000,000 in "unjust" taxes, Ogden L. Mills, secretary of the treasury, opened the senate hearings on the tax legislation with a forceful attack on the proposed high estate tax rates, the La Guardia stock transfer tax, the dividend tax and other excessive burdens on business corporations.

The secretary proposed the following changes in the bill: Personal home rate—Approved. Corporation tax—Cut from 13 1/2 per cent to 13 per cent.

Inheritance tax—Cut maximum from 45 per cent to 25 per cent on basis of 1921 schedule. Miscellaneous levies—Eliminate increased rate on consolidated corporation returns, normal tax on stock dividends, and repeal of net loss reductions.

Reduce or eliminate levies on stock and bond transfers. Taxes on gasoline, 1 cent a gallon; 7 per cent on domestic consumption of electricity and gas; 2 cents each on checks and drafts.

Increase tobacco manufacturers tax, except cigars, by 1-6 of 1 per cent; passenger automobiles from 3 to 5 per cent. Make admissions tax apply to all above 10 cents instead of above 45 cents.

Mr. Mills said his substitute recommendations would be drawn from the list of taxes in the original treasury program. He suggested one such revenue source—a two cent stamp tax on checks and drafts to yield $85,000,000.

All through his testimony before the committee the secretary emphasized the necessity of balancing the budget to preserve the credit of the government.

In executive session a resolution to ban tariff items in the bill was defeated by one vote, most of the Democrats voting in the affirmative.

Measure Would Make Birth Control Legal

Washington.—Representative Franklin W. Hancock, Jr. (Dem., N. C.) introduced into the house a bill to permit the circulation within certain specifications of contraception information through the mails, and to allow doctors to give such information verbally.

Technically the bill will amend a provision in the tariff act, written in by Anthony Comstock influence back in 1875, and would make a similar amendment in the criminal code.

URGES COMMISSION TO STUDY ECONOMY

President's Public Statement on National Outlay.

Washington.—President Hoover in a public statement recommended a board of congressional and executive appointees to chart a cut in expenditures. Without co-operative action, he suggested, there was no way by which a maximum reduction in expenditures could be effected.

Meeting objections that he was offering no specific suggestions for cuts, the President declared that his department heads had pointed to a multitude of congressional committees involved and the intermingling of legislative and executive responsibilities block progress.

The President listed three directions in which expenditures could be reduced: Direct reductions of appropriations, legislative reforms and curtailment of government services and consolidation of bureaus.

A resolution to carry out the President's program was introduced in the senate by Senator Wesley L. Jones, Republican, Washington, chairman of the appropriations committee.

In the house Speaker John N. Garner declared that if the President had specific suggestions for cutting federal outlays they would be followed.

Detroit in Default on Municipal Pay Rolls

Washington.—The Democratic tariff bill to strip the President of his tariff making power was passed by the senate by a vote of 42 to 30. It now goes back to the house for action on changes made by the senate.

Democrats voted solidly for the bill and were supported by six western Republicans.

The bill would repeal the Republican flexible tariff and provide for congressional action on changes in duties recommended by the tariff commission.

The amendment, sponsored by Senator Norris, Nebraska Republican, was accepted by Senator Harrison of Mississippi in charge of the Democratic bill.

It provides that when the United States customs court finds competition does not exist among domestic producers of a product protected by the tariff, the duties on that product shall be suspended.

Before passing the bill, the senate rejected the Vandenberg substitute bill, under which the present flexible law would be retained with provision for changes in the free list. The substitute was defeated 43 to 28.

He said the radio commission probably had all authority necessary to protect the public interest in broadcasting.

Big Readjustment on U. S. Crop Acreage

REALITY

By FANNIE HURST

WHAT happened to Norman Perry in Paris, during the latter teens of the Twentieth century, was just as much part of the world upheaval as machine guns, trench misery, air raid and barbed wire.

Upon this boy from the placid world of a suburb of Cincinnati, Ohio, there burst, with the variegated fire of a skyrocket, the spectacle of plunder and death, Paris and beauty, license and pain, vice, cowardice and a panorama of bravery that through the rocket's red glare, made mankind seem sublime.

Perry, at twenty, from the even tenor of his father's tool factory in the pretty suburb outside of Cincinnati, found himself something of a World-war hero, two bravery citations to his credit; a citizen of the world, floundering around the battlefields of France and Flanders for two years; and finally, a disabled soldier on extended leave while wounds of an ill but mortal nature, slowly but surely closed their ugly mouths.

Then what happened was just normal part of the abnormal condition. He met, through a vagary of circumstances, the usual little French Colette, whose hair was like a wet mop of curls, whose drooleries were as exciting as they were alluring, whose constancy was pathetic and whose adoration healed him more swiftly than medication.

He forgot, in the phantasmagoria of the moment, "the girl back home," ensconced himself with Colette in the traditional thatched attic on the left bank of the Seine, and for months the idle, irresponsible life of a man and his maid, flowed in uninterrupted bliss. Colette! He tried sometimes to capture the words to describe her. A dragon-fly skittling over bright waters. Popcorn dancing in its pan. A chrysanthemum in a gale. All to no effect. She would not be caught in the prison of words. She was thistle-down, dancing ahead of the wind. She eluded on every side. She was delectable nonsense, and then strangely, paradoxically, she was the frugal little French girl, conserving your interests, your funds, your health, your well-being.

Life in that attic, with geraniums on the window sills, cookery reeking from the little improvised stove, laughter blowing about the corners, happiness squatting every turn, was a dream caught in an interlude between two realities: the reality of war; the reality of the suburb of Cincinnati.

Life and Paris and flower stands and holidays on the Seine and walks in Fontainebleau and nibbles in patisseries and kisses on the back of Colette's daring, adorable neck were just one bouquet of irresponsible hours crammed with irresponsible joys. You awoke with a sense of holiday, you breakfasted with Colette on your knees with a sense of holiday, you galloped through the all too short days with that same sense of holiday and blessedly, wornout with fatigue of pleasant hours, you slept that you might awaken to another holiday.

And so the days became the weeks and the months and finally the year, and then, as is the case with all perfect holidays, there came one day the awakening to the still cold dawn of reality.

It came in the form of two trumpet calls. Armistice! And a cable from the girl back home. Helen, worn with the waiting; eager, homesick, rejoiced, was arriving with her mother for a Paris wedding and a honeymoon trip to America.

Well, it fell into the midst of that small paradise as bombs like that were falling into one after another of the transient paradises that honey-combed Paris and had been erected out of the toll and mof of war. Colette, who knew everything, and in a way had been prepared for the blow before it fell, took it when it came in the same dauntless spirit that characterized the countless of her kind.

Norman, feeling smothered, guilty toward both Colette and Helen, wretched, apprehensive, and filled with a sense of the kind of obligation and responsibility that has its moorings in sections like the suburbs outside the Cincinnati of America, bowed his head and his heart and succumbed to the predicament of caring for two women and having to choose one.

It was characteristic of Helen, when she arrived, that she should have tolerance and sympathy and understanding for the veiled confessions that came in dribblets from the lips of her fiancé.

Of course Norman had been indiscreet. The wonder of it is that he had survived to tell the tale at all.

Age Not Mere Matter of Passage of Years

It is an old saying that a woman is as old as she looks and a man is as old as he feels. Women who take an interest in life never look old, being full of gaiety and animation, and men who take an interest in life never feel old for the same reason. Actually, age is more a matter of mind than body, for a swift, flying mind keeps the body young, whereas a swift, flying body won't keep the mind young unless the wits are exercised and the pleasant emotions of life given full play.

If anyone disbelieves me, I merely point to the life statisticians of insurance companies, which prove that a country clergyman has a far better expectation of life than the most highly exercised physical training instructor. The country clergyman leads a quiet, useful life, takes a deep interest in his fellow creatures, has a good conscience, and exercises his mind. The physical training instructor may have an equally good conscience but he concentrates on the exercise of his body; with the passing of years his wits begin to creak and suddenly he finds himself an old man in spite of all those long-arm balances and somersaults.

In short, if your years number eighty and you still want to live forever, you are young. If your years number twenty-five and you wouldn't care if you were lunched off tomorrow, you are old.—London Tit-Bits.

Hindu Puzzles Scientists

"I am completely mystified," declared a famous scientist, after witnessing a remarkable demonstration of poison swallowing by a Madras, Swami, carried out at Calcutta university under strictest scientific supervision. The man drank poison, showing a preference for cyanide of potassium, varied with broken glass and nails, without ill-effect. The poison was retained in the stomach, and the position of the articles located. The performance was regarded as a definite challenge to modern science.

A man could not be held responsible for his reactions under the conditions of war. As if it had not happened, Forget.

And so, as the saying goes, were married and lived happily. There was a honeymoon trip outside of Cincinnati, a lovely living room and a garden and a fine, family sedan in the two-car garage.

Helen, beautiful, dutiful and was proper companion to her husband. A housekeeper, a maid, a considerable social emity in the community and a wife who furthered the steady advancement of the man of her choice. You could not find in her quiet order and always lovely environment created by Helen, and not a tax against its sedative lure. If Norman had stopped to question himself, events, in the ordinary course of man does not, he would have found no small amount of happiness and even more.

Helen, who wore her hair in delectable loose ringlets over her ears and caught low in a knot at the base of her neck, was in a her very best of repose, the essence of what a man seeks in his marriage. In a way, though he did not put it so, Norman, with his slight, short, black hair, his square jaw, which in America is the badge for efficiency, his brisk tailor-made manner and up-to-date coming commercialism, was just as neatly leaven to his entrance.

The Norman Perry, when the children were six and eight and ten, was the sort of young people who were "coming on." Norman, already a man on his own effort, was about to inherit his father's business, as well as certain important real estate holdings which would accrue to him through Helen, whose parents had died.

It was about then that the Perry decided to use their business as a garage and servant's quarters, and move on the site of the old parental mansion, a new and even more prosperous home.

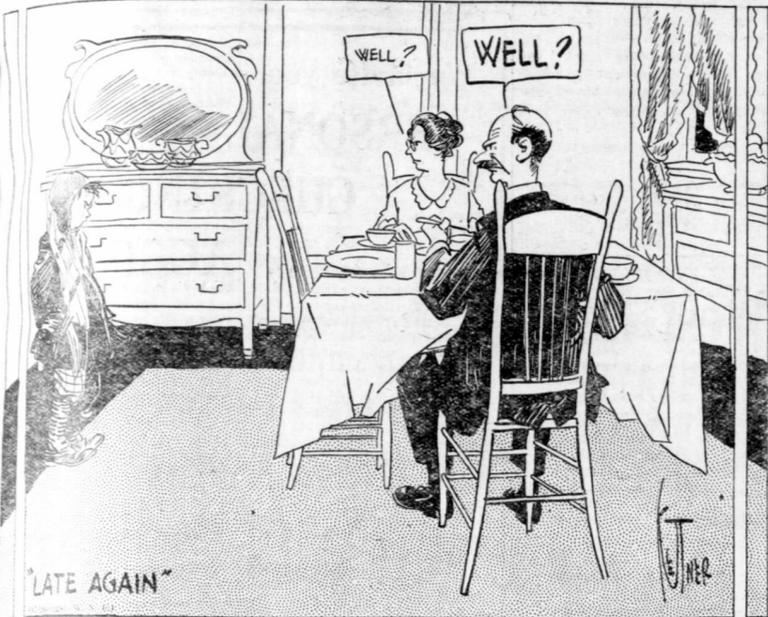

It was one of those success stories of a normal, up-and-coming little family working their way up and up to a prosperous community. Clean, cautious, conservative living; strong ideals; well educated children; social advancement, travel, culture and praiseworthy old age.

Mrs. Norman Perry, as the wife of the president of the largest women's club in Cincinnati, patronized every important musical enterprise in town, sponsored cultural events, community work and was a member of the board of one of the city's largest charity hospitals.

Norman, as president of two corporations, officer in a bank, president of a noonday club and pillar of a church and several philanthropic organizations, marched onward toward millions.

Trimming Ideas for Wash Frocks

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

SPRINGTIME is here, which brings thoughts of the sewing campaign which is and ever will be at this season of the year.

Here's a timely word of advice, be sure to stock your work basket and your sewing cabinet with a goodly assortment of crochet hooks and crochet threads and yarns, for a touch of hand crochet is the call of the hour. Paris is all enthusiasm on the crochet subject and so is every style-wise American woman and her next-door neighbor.

It is taken for granted that you have been buying up all sorts of pretty wash materials in anticipation of this annual sewing bee, for who can resist the lure of the perfectly lovely cottons, rayons and linens and washable silks which have been so temptingly on display throughout the various fabric departments this many a day.

As usual the "still small voice" is bidding mother to consider the needs of the little folks of the household first. Which is the reason why we are showing this group of interesting styles for children. Seeing that hand crochet is so exceedingly popular, why not adorn little daughter's bright washable-print school frock with neck trim and sleeve bands of hand crochet. They will give an air of distinction to her gown such as only handwork can give.

These little crochet pieces are so easy to do that an entire set like that which adorns the frock to the left in the picture can be made in one evening while listening in on the radio. The short story hour would afford sufficient time, for the stitch is easy and the strips are straight. Since the tub material selected for the frock shown is brown with orange and ecru tiny figures, the thread for the neckband and cuffs is also an ecru shade. The french mesh, flit, or even the modified Irish crochet stitch may be employed with equal effect. Use 30 to 50 unmercerized crochet thread and a No. 10 or 8 steel crochet hook.

The neckband and cuffs are applied with a trim stitch thread in one of colors of the design in the fabric. The trim stitch is done on the machine. Use the coarsest of machine needles, and set the gauge for nine or ten stitches to the inch. Bias trim in orange shade outlines the clever yoke effect at the waistline.

Speaking of bias trim, any young girl will be most delighted with a plaid gypsy girle with head band to match, such as is worn by the seated figure sketched above to the left. The idea is to stitch bias trim in various colors outlining a plaid design as is shown. This is really a unique idea and one which can be worked very effectively in a trimming way. Jade, scarlet, pilot blue, orange and black bias trim make a striking combination when plaided as suggested.

Just as novel and interesting is the bridled hatband and girle which the other young miss is wearing. This set is also made of bias trim, such as can be bought by the bolt at any notion counter. Fold the bias trim in half, and fasten the ends with thumb tacks to a desk blotter or pad. Then interlace the strips firmly, continuing with pins to hold in position as you proceed from one side to the other. The hat band may be made a little narrower than the belt, using five instead of seven strips.

The little girl who is going stepping, in the foreground of the picture, has her pretty white blouse smocked to perfection, in gay colors.

COLOR FEATURE OF SPRING ENSEMBLES

The color theme is a predominating feature of many of the new spring ensembles. A dark coat with a light touch is worn with a light frock that boasts a dark note to match the coat, and there is the ensemble. Of course, it is not quite as simple as all that, but this color scheme is certainly extremely popular here.

You will like the new ensembles, for they certainly are different from almost anything shown for many a season, most attractive and wearable, and refreshingly new. Fine materials and furs are used. The frocks often boast a very complicated cut and yet the outcome is an apparently simple costume, without any trace of the opulent or lavish.

Pale Beige Is Favored for Spring Ensembles

Beige may be announced with authority as one of the smart shades for spring. It returns to fashion very pale after an absence of several years. Many a woman will give thanks for this return, as it is both a becoming and a practical shade.

The bright colors that have been high style items for more than a year are being seriously menaced by beige and other neutral colors. It looks as if these gaudy shades might be pushed out of the style picture in another few months. They've had a pretty good day, and may well have run their course.

Be that as it may, though, you will do well to keep this prophecy well in mind, beige is in again. It is being used by the great French dressmakers for jacket ensembles that are going to be smart next spring and that may be worn under the fur coat instanter.

CORDUROY PRINT

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Corduroy goes printed for this smart pajama ensemble which is carried out in the ever good-looking black and white combination. The strictly tailored lines are featured this season for pajama costumes which go cruising, or strolling on the beach, or which enter into sports of any description.

Jackets, Jackets! Jackets are an integral part of the season's dress. They range from bolero to finger-tip lengths.

Latest Hints From Dictators of Fashion

Jacket fronts close on the diagonal. Military treatments abound in the style realm. Narrow brims disappear at the left side of the hat. Crocheted blouses of the Irish lace type are the latest. Bolero jackets are fashioned with eg o'mutton sleeves. Chanel continues to endorse or endorse for evening wear.

Pleated tulle ruffles border evening gowns. Berets are slipping farther to the right than ever. An increased vogue for prints this spring is predicted. Tucked artificial silks are among the novelty spring fabrics. Orange and chartreuse velvet figured prominently in a showing of evening wraps.

... when kings had many slaves, it was the custom to bury a slave alongside the dead monarch, supposedly to protect his master from all things harmful.

The day of the slave, and these ancient customs, have passed; but there still lingers the desire to everlastingly protect the remains of those who have passed away.

The assurance of this protection is provided through the Buckstaff Burial Vault, which is guaranteed, for 99 years, to protect against ground waters and burrowing animals entering the vault.

It is a source of comfort to know that the remains of our departed will be safe through the ages. Many modern families consider the Vault as necessary as the casket.

HARTFORD KEYS TO HIGH PITCH

The citizens of Hartford have been keyed to a high pitch the past two weeks because of very good prospects in securing a manufacturing institution doing $1,300,000 business annually. If Hartford is fortunate in securing this factory, it will mean a payroll of $350,000 and offer steady employment to 450 men and women. Citizens of Hartford, through their Mayor, A. F. Polt, are being asked to subscribe towards a certain stipulated fund required to assure the actual expense of dismantling the plant in question, transporting it to Hartford and re-equip same.

NOTICE

Commencing next week Wednesday, April 20th, the various stores of the village will be open on Wednesday and Saturday evenings during the summer months.

SUITABLE FOODS

Some day when there is a bit of cold meat, such as chicken, ham, or, in fact, any good well-seasoned meat, put it through the food chopper and use as filling for the following dish:

Stuffed Onions.—Take six large onions, peel and remove enough of the center to form a cavity to hold the following mixture: One-tablespoonful of minced green pepper, one-half cupful of meat, one tablespoonful of butter, paprika and salt to taste, with the centers of the onion finely minced. Stuff with this mixture and place in gem pans with a little hot water in each, baste while cooking with cream or butter and water and serve with a rich butter sauce poured over the onions. Sausage makes a fine stuffing for the above.

Honey Ice Cream.—Blend one tablespoonful of cornstarch with one-quarter of a cupful of cold milk, add two and three-fourths cupfuls of scalded milk and cook until smooth and thickened; cook in a double boiler 15 minutes. Mix two beaten eggs, one cupful of honey and one teaspoonful of salt, add gradually to the hot mixture. Cool and freeze as usual.

Mineral Oil Mayonnaise.—Here is a recipe for the overweight person: Mix one teaspoonful of mustard, one-half teaspoonful of salt, small pinch of pepper, and paprika and one egg yolk. Beat in slowly drop by drop one cupful of mineral oil, adding a little vinegar occasionally until two tablespoonfuls are added. Keep in a cool place.

Molded Chicken Salad.—Soak two tablespoonfuls of gelatin in one-half cupful of cold chicken stock, heat one and one-half cupfuls of stock and add the gelatin to it, add one-half a teaspoonful of salt, cool, and when nearly set fold in two and one-half cupfuls of dried cooked chicken, one-fourth cupful of chopped green pepper, three-fourths of a cupful of dried celery, one-half cupful each of mayonnaise and cream, whipped. Turn into a mold and serve with whipped cream and mayonnaise.

How It Started

By Jean Newton

Quixotic
FOR this perfectly good English word there is explanation in no study of etymology that ever was on land or sea. No method of prefix, suffix, root explanation will serve here.

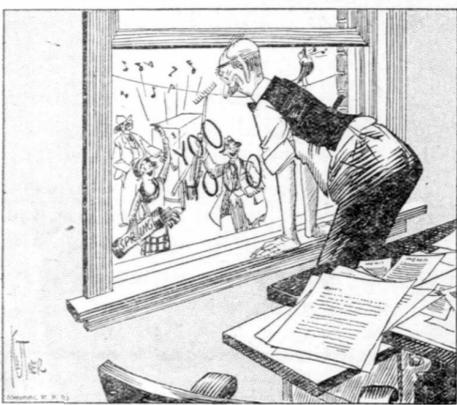

For the word comes to us from a literary character whose name was the title of the work in which he is immortal—Cervantes' "Don Quixote." In this chivalrous romance in which, according to some opinions, Cervantes wished to burlesque the old Spanish knight-errantry, the author presents a lovable character, Don Quixote, courteous to all, gallant, generous, child-like in his extravagant romanticism. In other words, he was anything but practical.

Although it is over 300 years since Don Quixote took printed form—his name is pronounced Key-o-tay—we have anglicized him, and to this day when we want to describe something as foolishly impractical we call it Quixotic.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

by WALTER TRUMBULL

There is a wealthy widower in New York, one of whose daughters lives with him in his rather elaborate home. He is a man of quick temper and strong will who, when he is crossed or if anything occurs which is not to his liking, roars like a couple of lions. Invariably, he eats one egg for breakfast, and has done so for years, but for some reason he likes to see more than one egg on the platter. Perhaps he likes to make a selection. I don't know. At any rate, his cook apparently got tired of seeing the other eggs returned and one morning sent up a platter with a single egg on it.

The head of the house took one look at it and then began to roar in his best manner. He demanded to know why in the blue blazes he was served with a single egg. His butler, an old retainer, told him frankly that he had not in the memory of the oldest inhabitant eaten more than one egg and that the cook undoubtedly had concentrated on cooking that one in the best possible manner. The man roared that he would have things cooked and served in his own house as he got dinged pleased and said to the butler: "You go out there and tell that fat, addle-pated excuse for a cook to poach eggs and keep on poaching eggs, until I send her word to stop."

The butler delivered the message, the man ate his egg, and then departed hastily for his car, waiting to take him to his office.

Pretty soon his daughter appeared for breakfast. Practically covering the table were platters of eggs. She asked what it meant and the butler explained. She asked how many eggs the cook had poached and the butler said he thought the count had reached about three dozen, and that supplies were running low. The daughter, who was not in the slightest afraid of her father, for all his roaring, smiled a wicked smile.

"Send out for more eggs," she said, "and tell the cook to keep right on following orders."

About an hour later she telephoned her father.

"Don't you," she said, "think it's to neighbors he had put the $6,000 in bills right in his trouser pocket, where it would stay.

Then two men carrying revolvers came into his room.

"Give us those $6,000 bills you've got in your pocket," they said. Grakos obeyed.

about time to tell her to stop?"

"What in blue blazes are you talking about?" demanded the head of the house. "I'm busy."

"Oh, all right," said his daughter sweetly. "Only the table is covered and the sideboard is covered and there are platters of eggs on all the chairs and out into the living room, and on the piano. You gave the order, so of course I, don't want to interfere. There are ten dozen poached eggs here waiting for you now, but you know your own capacity."

And she hung up the receiver.

When Gene Tunney was traveling in England, he was accosted by a small boy who produced a little book and asked for the retired heavyweight champion's autograph. Tunney gave it to him, and the kid thanked him and said:

As Joe Beckett ended most of his fights lying down, Tunney was not complimented. Gene used to receive a big mail in England, and a large portion of it was from persons offering to sell him public houses. Bombadier Wells owns a bar, and does a good business.

Chinese Leaders Split on Educational Plans

China, unlike most nations, has nothing that can really be called a national sport. Japan, in much the same circumstances, adopted baseball; but baseball in China has never caught on to any great extent. Mission schools and Y. M. C. A.'s, however, have done much to teach forms of sport to elementary and middle school students, with the result that basketball, tennis and football are beginning to prove fairly popular, but only among an extremely small percentage of the nation's many millions of youths. As far as the revival of folklore (which is being considered by the social education department of the ministry of education) is concerned, it is expected that the ministry will encounter difficulties. China is rich in folklore, but while with one hand the government is trying to encourage its revival, with the other hand the government is launching a bitter campaign against superstition. Much of China's ancient folklore deals with supernatural beings, and with historical and mythical characters endowed with supernatural powers. What is needed, according to educational leaders, is the development of a critical faculty among students and the populace which will enable them to disassociate themselves entirely from the million and one popular myths which form the basis of their mental texture, if not of their religious beliefs.

Railroads Buying Needed Supplies

Carriers Will Spend $1,000,000,000 in 1932.

Chicago.—Preliminary budgets of America's railroads, indicating an expenditure of $1,000,000,000 in 1932 for supplies, may set the pace of revival of buying and recovery of business in the nation.

The acceptance of a 10 per cent reduction in wages by the railroad workers, effecting savings estimated at $215,000,000 for the coming year and increased freight rates which will add more than $100,000,000 to the carriers' revenue, will place the leading roads on a sound financial basis and allow purchases of supplies which have been needed but deferred for several months, because of conditions. An expenditure of one billion dollars in 1932 will be an increase of more than $300,000,000 over last year when the roads bought $685,000,000 worth of supplies. The 1931 expenditures, smallest in many years, showed a big decrease from 1930 when $1,038,000,000 was expended.

The year 1930 might be regarded as a normal buying year although previous years, when many roads were making extensive improvements, went far beyond that figure.

Railroad purchases are a wide-spread factor in the nation's prosperity as steel mills and industries in all sections of the country will share the benefits of any increase in business.

Equipment Neglected. Equipment of the railroads in the past year has been neglected, rights of way have become run down, maintenance shops have not been manned to full capacity and in general the railroads need a building up all along the line.

Railroads do not contemplate extensive buying of new rolling stock but with traffic estimated on the present basis, supplies to maintain equipment and fortification of road beds will call for heavy expenditures, road officials say. The increased expenditures will mean workers and maintenance of way employees on the railroads and, likewise added employment in the industries benefiting which will strengthen buying power by hundreds of millions of dollars—a good contribution to revival of business in the country.

Ohio, and Connecticut districts rank leaves to appear as it should in the order named.

SYNOPSIS

Joe Barry, country youth in New York, takes out a living as a barber in a poor rooming house near an accordion player named Bertolini's restaurant. Lured to the open country, he becomes a part of the fields, near Bertolini's discharges. He is offered a job by a man he knows only as "Martin" to improve a liquor runner facing prison. It means a penitentiary sentence for Joe if he accepts the proposition.

CHAPTER I—Continued

"A fellow could do a lot with ten times that much money," the voice beside him was saying. "He could go out into some little town and buy himself a little business and a home, or get a farm if he liked that kind of a life. What's a few years anyway? You're only about twenty-five."

"But I wouldn't know what to do or do it. I'd have to give myself up and say I'd do the things that they could give I didn't."

"What do you worry you. All you have to do is refuse to answer any of the questions. That's no difficult job. Why?" he asked quickly. "Do you want that money? I'm handing you a chance to trade a few years for a good time all the rest of your life. Think it over."

"The man leaned closer. "That would be more men than all the penitentiaries in the world. Can it be true?" he said. "I'll give you ten dollars to think it over. Keep the money close to you. Tomorrow at ten o'clock I'll be in your room at ten o'clock tomorrow night and get the money. Nothing difficult about that."

"No, sir."

"And while you're out," said Martin. "I'll put most of that money in some small town bank. Give me the name of the bank tomorrow night and I'll deposit the rest for you; four thousand more when you prove you're going through with it and the other five when you're really on the way. Well, his tone had finality. "Nobody ever got anywhere by hesitating."

An hour later, Joe Barry stood trembling in his gas-tight room. One sweating hand was clasped about the heavy roll of bills in his trousers pocket. What was a few years to a young fellow? A person had to get a start in life somehow—better than half starving—half starving and being aged up here in the city, in a room like this.

through the section of the new account card calling for references. Then he had asked innocently: "Can't I just leave this book with you? I'll be away, and a friend of mine is going to make some deposits to my credit."

After that, he had gone forth to the spending of a part of his remaining two hundred dollars. There was the barber shop, from his bath to a shampoo and a massage. Then came a clothing store. At last, everything else purchased, a new Joe Barry, well-dressed, well-groomed, alert, the hard lines gone from the corners of his lips, paused in the fitting of a new hat.

"I thought I heard hand music," he said to the clerk.

The salesman looked at his watch, then went to the door, leaning far out. "The parade," he said on returning. "Late as usual. Ever seen a circus parade on time?"

Joe Barry heard only two words. "Circus parade!" he said and grinned. "Gee! A big circus?"

"Not so big. Dayton Brothers. Pretty good—at least, it was last year."

Joe Barry saw the fag-end of the parade. He could see managerie cages rocking along far ahead, with plumed horses; a clown rode the line of march upon a still bicycle; there were three elephants, tail to trunk, and a cellophane, hooting forth a steamy footnote to the procession. After Joe had eaten his luncheon he went out to the circus grounds.

Three hours later, he still was on the show grounds, merely wandering around. He had seen the big show, and the sideshow twice. A starved boy-man had found a feast in the down which had meant an acme of happiness since his earliest memories.

He stopped to talk to canvassmen and roughnecks, asking them where the circus would go from here, and if it was fun to be with a show like this. He listened to the gruff roarings of the animals in the menagerie tent, and stared at the maze of stakes and ropes, wondering how on earth they managed to pick up everything when they moved at night. At last, he paused before a small tent, set apart from the dressing tent proper, looking down with sudden longing upon a glittering thing which rested upon a chair there.

"Gee!" he said at last. "It's an lorio!"

After a time, he glanced about, like a boy about to go under a fence to an apple orchard. Then he leaned forward and touched it.

"Gee!" he said again.

It was the first time he ever had seen one, outside of a music store show window. He glanced about him, then impulsively picked up the instrument, merely holding it in playing position without the strap over his shoulders. Just to get the feel of it, and to run his fingers over the piano keyboard and to tap the tiny mother-of-pearl protuberances which denoted the "hundred and twenty base."

Temptation was strong. At last he yielded.

He used the bellows softly, surreptitiously, as if he were actually stealing the melody. A truly professional instrument like this had figured in many a dream of Joe Barry's; the music of true steel reeds, the soft action of delicately balanced piano keys, the instant response to pressure; unconsciously his fingers played more swiftly upon the keys and the pull of the bellows grew stronger; the circus faded.

"That's pretty," a voice said.

The music ceased. Joe Barry felt the blood streaming into his face; he gulped and hastily replaced the accordion upon the chair.

"I didn't mean to play it," he said boyishly. Dazedly he realized that the girl who faced him, now in street clothing, had been a person of silk and tulle when he last had seen her swinging gracefully about the center ring of the circus upon a dappled gray horse. Then haltingly: "It's yours I guess?"

"It's in my act," she said. A pause followed, awkward yet natural, the mutual dispersing of all else while two young persons took stock of each other. The girl was young, only a year or so more than twenty. She was vibrant and alert; with something more in the blue depths of her eyes than mere beauty. The sun came gliding about the end of the little tent and crept into her hair, weaving a thousand meshes of gold there. She straightened; the clean-lined vivacity of her rounded into evidence even under the handspan of clothing. Suddenly she said:

"He's the fellow who plays for you?" queried Joe.

"You saw the act, did you?" "Yes," Joe was awkwardly silent. The girl smiled.

"Well, go ahead and say it. You didn't like it?" "Oh, I liked you."

"But you didn't like the act? Well," the girlishness of her had faded into a youthful maturity. "I know it isn't what it should be. You see, in the beginning, the idea was fine. There was a young Italian on the show that who could play the accordion. So we decided on dressing Lombardi in a Pierrot costume, the same white silk one that Blackie wears now, and shutting off the rest of the show and having him sing and play in the center of the ring while I rested between turns. We could do that all right; the tent is small enough for a voice to reach all parts of it. Can you sing?" she asked naively.

"Yes, I sing some," Joe Barry confessed. "I used to sing a lot."

"I thought you did. I heard you humming when you first started to play."

"Was I?" He laughed. "I didn't notice."

"I gathered as much. Well, you'd understand what I mean, then. Lombardi had intended to put on a straight clown make-up—not the funny kind, you know, but just white, with black diamonds on his forehead and cheeks. I was to dress as Pierrette, and he would sing to me. But of course," she added as though Joe Barry knew all about it, "he was hurt just a week before we opened, and I don't suppose he'll ever be able to troupe again."

He'd already spent all this money for the best accordion Uncle Dan could buy, so we thought we'd salvage what we could. Of course Blackie only plays a little and he hates it, so he doesn't help much."

"You know, I thought that! I kind of felt he hurt things," Joe confessed. "You were so—so pretty and graceful, riding around there and so, oh, you know, sort of fresh and sweet looking and everything—"

"Be careful!" Sue Dayton laughed and grasping a guy rope, put her head against her upraised arm.

"You—you know, I was just telling you what I was thinking. He didn't seem to take much interest. Then I got to thinking, how pretty that all would be if there were somebody in there who just loved to play. This way, Blackie—is that his name?—is just there. But it seemed to me that he ought to come in, like he'd followed you, and play as he entered the ring. And you would pose and throw kisses to him upon the horse. Of course, it was kind of silly, I've never seen anything in a circus like that."

"Silly?" The girl had looked at his arm. "Don't you know that it isn't silly to think of such things, just because they've never been done? Suddenly she whirled, and called: "Uncle Dan!" A red-faced man with gray hair and a bulbous nose halted abruptly in his swift course from the pad-room entrance of the big top.

"Well, what is it? What is it, Sue?" he asked. Then he noticed Joe Barry. "Want to see me, young fellow?"

"No, but I do," the girl broke in. "We've been talking about my act. He has the most wonderful idea for it! And I thought maybe the three of us could talk things over—maybe—"

"Looking for a job?" asked Uncle Dan. "Play that thingamajig?" "Beautifully!" said the girl.

"Looking for a job?" asked Uncle Dan again.

Joe Barry stammered.

"Well, I don't know—yes, I guess I'd sure like one—"

"Sing!" "Yes, sir."

"Sue here says you've got ideas. Sue's a pretty good judge. Let's have them." Suddenly, he veered. "What's your name?"

A sudden constriction rose in Joe Barry's throat; he strove to cover it with a cough. He felt his features grow cold and suddenly hot.

"Bradley's my name, sir," he said at last.

The next half-hour was tazy for Joe Barry. He had come out to his small room prepared to sell something that was worthless, his physical freedom. Then suddenly this freedom had become paramount in his desires. Here he had found an opportunity to weld himself to something which thrilled him strangely, an unfettered life which fretted his imagination and tugged at him with ambitions which until today he had not realized that he possessed. Then Uncle Dan had asked his name and sent a skeleton of futility rattling within his memory. He could not do this! A contract had been made and a cash payment accepted to bind it by which he must go to prison!

This was the time of times when he would have desired above all things to be utterly honest. It was galling to realize that with every word he was twisting himself deeper into a morass of deception. Suddenly he straightened, clear-eyed.

"I might as well tell you, Miss Dayton. I'm up against some problems in this thing," came grimly. "A man made me a proposition which he asked me to keep a secret. I've got to keep my word to him."

"Certainly." There was a hint of surprise in her tone.

"It rather ties me up—until I can see him and get my release. But I've been thinking it over. He made me this offer when I needed a job pretty badly. It's only fair to him to keep my part of the agreement until I can tell him I won't go through with it."

"Then you've decided?" Sue Dayton was plainly pleased. "Oh, that's grand! Someway, I think you were meant for a circus."

"I know I was!" Joe Barry laughed boyishly. "I didn't realize it until today. It's what I've wanted all my life."

Events were happier after that. Sue Dayton did most of the talking—mostly of the show. Martin would come to his tiny room at ten o'clock. Joe would tell him what had happened, honestly, frankly. He'd make his offer of repayment for the money he had spent—nearly seventy-five dollars as he remembered it. Perhaps he could pawn his accordion for part of it—he could send the rest from the circus; Dan Dayton had promised him thirty-five a week at the start and more if he lived up to expectations. He'd tell Martin all that, and he'd try to convince him. But the attorney tried to hold him to his bargain, there was a remedy. An inspiration had told Joe he could go to the police.

On the train, Joe Barry breathed deeper with something of relief. Martin wouldn't want that. Suddenly he was glad he had thought of that, for more reasons than his own safety. It had not occurred to him until the necessity of escape arose that he might be taking part in something approaching the criminal. Yes, he was glad he had thought of that, he told himself, as darkness came and the train rushed through the first of Jersey cities on the way to New York.

But it had to be done quickly—Joe knew that. He couldn't dilly-dally with Martin, how that he had thought of this new angle. Give him a chance, tell him the new viewpoint that he'd gained and then demand his release. There must be no wait of a few days to think it over. Then came a new fear: what if it had gone too far already? He erased that. Nothing had really been arranged yet; he didn't even know the name of the man whose place he was supposed to take, or exactly what he had done. Martin had said he would take that matter up after Joe had really made his decision.

"Well, I've made it!" the man mumbled.

The train seemed to drag after that. The instant it plunged into the tunnel on the way to the station, Joe was out of his seat in the grimy smoking car and waiting at the door. Then he was out and running, up the stairs and through the long, maze-like exits toward the street.

"Well, where you been this time?" It was a querulous, angry voice from the first landing. "No beds made, no rooms swept out—think we're going to keep on standin' for this?"

Joe Barry snapped a rejoinder and went on. He reached the door of his room, and pawing deep into his pocket for his personal key, sent it into the lock. The door yielded, a faint V of light went into the room from the gas jet in the hall. Joe Barry halted, his lower jaw loose in surprise. On the floor before him lay something metallic, something which had been pushed under the door. Then he sat on the bed and laughed.

It had been a joke! It had been a joke, that's all—just somebody playing a joke on him. They'd slipped up here during the day and returned that pass-key he had given Martin, by slipping it under the door. But as suddenly he sobered. Nobody would give a fellow a thousand dollars for a joke! He looked at the pass-key; suddenly he went to the gas jet and struck a match, illuminating the room. He searched the floor for a note. There was nothing. He jerked out his cheap watch, suddenly ticking with clocklike resonance. Five minutes to ten.

"I won't give him any leeway," Joe had slumped to the bed again, the pass-key still in his right hand. Again he studied it. Why had they slipped that under the door? Just come up here and slipped the thing under the door—

A minute passed; Joe confirmed it by looking at his watch. Then he began to count, one, two, three, four, five—he wondered how much a person would have to count before it all made a minute. He remembered how the old photographer back in Waverly used to count for time exposures, one thousand and one, one thousand and two, one thousand and three—

He started and listened. The stairs creaked. As if some one were coming up. Or maybe it was just some one going down to the street.

Suddenly he jerked to his feet, as if jolted by electricity. Some one was at the door. Staccato, hollow pounding. Joe Barry moved forward. He swung wide the door.

Four men stood there, well-dressed men, staring quietly at him. One flipped his coat back, and the edge of a shield gleamed in the gaslight.

"You're Joe Barry," he said, more as a statement than as a question. Joe could not answer. Two of the men dodged swiftly behind him.

"Fan him for a rod," came the coldly monotonous voice. "Better not take any chances."

TRUTH ABOUT POEM "BEAUTIFUL SNOW"

The story that the familiar poem "Beautiful Snow" was written by a young woman who committed suicide in Cincinnati is a romantic yarn that has tagged after a poem for years. It is entirely untrue. Burton E. Stevenson, in "Famous Single Poems," is one writer who explains the source of the story.

During the Civil war an unidentified young woman died in the Commercial hospital in Cincinnati, and among her effects was found a manuscript of this poem. It was sent to Enos B. Reed, editor of the National Union, who printed it and credited its authorship to the dead girl.

But it developed when the verses began to be copied among the newspapers that the lines had originally appeared in Harper's Weekly of November 27, 1858, some years before the death of the unknown girl.

The poem was published originally unsigned. It was written by John Whitaker Watson, who was born in New York in 1824, graduated at Columbia university and studied medicine, but entered journalism and developed into a writer of sentimental verse and sensational serials. None of his other poems ever achieved the notice of this one, and because of the attention it attracted, he used its name as the title of a book of verse which he published in 1869—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

DIRE RESULTS OF WASTED RESOURCES

Perhaps the richest country in Europe in natural resources is Rumania, yet its people live on the lowest level of culture, in squalor and poverty. Perhaps the poorest countries in Europe in natural resources are Switzerland, Holland and Denmark, yet these have the highest general level of well-being.

Within the limits of common experience, prosperity depends not so much on abundance of natural resources as upon the manner of controlling and using them.

The way in which natural resources are controlled and used to promote well-being is a good measure of a civilization. Half a million Indians fought for hunting grounds and lived precariously in what is now the United States. The Greece of today has been robbed and denuded until it looks like a desert. The peasants' goats have stripped the mountain sides, as the army and the politicians have the nation. A man will travel long distances over the mountains to gather a bundle of brush no larger than a lilac bush, to use for fuel. Yet Greece under good care could be a land of plenty.

Poor, barren Switzerland has educated her people, managed her forests, enriched her meadows, harnessed her waters, and exploited her natural beauty (which is no finer than that of Greece) to support a moderate and thrifty, but relatively widely distributed, well-being.—A. H. Morgan in "Anthropology (College) Notes."
