

The KITCHEN CABINET

SUMMER HINTS

DURING the hot weather, where there is much humidity, the body loses much moisture which is most essential to it, so it is wise to drink freely of cooling drinks to supply this waste.

Very cold drinks chill the stomach and are unwholesome for anyone, especially children and adults who are suffering with heat. Iced drinks when served should be sipped slowly.

When very warm pour cold water over the wrists for a few minutes to cool the blood before drinking anything.

Iced tea is a most refreshing beverage for meal time. Lemonade is another which never loses its popularity.

Grape juice, pineapple, orange and lime juices are all delightful for cooling drinks. Add the sugar to the lemon juice and when well dissolved, the water and it will be just right.

Piazza Delight.—Boil one-half cupful of sugar with two and one-half cupfuls of water and the grated rind of one orange for five minutes. Chill, add two cupfuls of orange juice and three tablespoonfuls of lemon juice and serve.

Pineapple Punch.—Boil one quart of water with two cupfuls of sugar and two cupfuls of chopped pineapple twenty minutes. Add one cupful of orange juice and one-half cupful of lemon juice, cool, strain and dilute with ice water and serve.

Strawberry Shrub.—Select sound ripe fruit, wash and measure and place in a stone jar. For each four quarts of berries use one quart of not too strong vinegar. Cover the jar with a cloth tied over it. Stir the berries daily for four days. Strain without squeezing and put into a kettle, allowing one pound of sugar for each pint of liquor. Boil slowly for five minutes, bottle, cork and seal. Dilute with water when serving. Raspberries make a fine drink prepared in this way.

Firemen Are Called to Rescue Goat From Roof

Bristol, R. I.—Bristol firemen, accustomed to rescuing marooned cats from trees and recapturing fugitive canaries, encountered a new one recently when they were asked to haul a goat off a veranda roof 50 feet above the street.

GAME OF GOLF HAZARD

This game is for as many players as wish to join. Directions for play are as follows: There are nine holes. Each player starts at hole number one. Each player has three small very flat buttons and one large one or if you have celluloid disks such as are used in the game of Tiddy Winks, these are better still for it is by snapping these into place that moves are made. One snap is allowed at each turn. The players must get their men around the entire course and the one who does it first wins. The button must land in the center of each hole, not touching the sides. If it goes beyond the hole he is aiming for the player loses his next turn. If it does not go as far as the hole he is aiming for he loses two turns. If another player is on the hole desired by the player moving, he must successfully skip this one and land in the one beyond, but if he misses he must go back to the beginning.

Lights of New York

By WALTER TRUMBULL

What seems to me the most detectable story I have heard in ages is told me by Kathleen Caesar.

"There was," says Miss Caesar, "a young man of Greenwich Village who really could write. He worked hard enough to get together a few thousand dollars, took that stake to Europe, and lost it almost as fast as if he had played the market instead of the boulevards. He was a good fellow while he had it, but when they shipped him home his only assets were a first-class hangover and a second-class berth to sleep it off.

While he had been away, the procession had moved on and it looked as if he might be left standing on the sidewalk. That is to say, things were not so good, when suddenly there was a fluttering sound and into the young man's life flopped an "angel."

"The 'angel' was a man who could write large checks, which never bounced back, but had a great desire to write a book. His qualifications as a novelist were ambition and a vague idea for a plot. He made the young man a proposition.

"I have a great idea for a book," he said, "but I haven't time to give to the actual labor of construction. I'll get you an apartment, pay for your meals, and furnish you with plenty of tobacco and a reasonable amount of liquor if you will do the work. I'm giving you the plot. All you have to do is the writing."

The young man finally agreed to terms. He and his typewriter were duly installed in a smart and comfortable apartment and the "angel" came in every day to see that he was not being gyped.

As a matter of fact, he was getting the full worth of his money. As has been said, the young man really could write and he got interested in his job. He turned and twisted the idea the man had given him until it was a real plot. The characters began to breathe and grow, to live and struggle. Even the "angel," who insisted upon reading each day's work, could see that he and the young man were going to write quite a story.

He grew most impatient to see how it would turn out.

At last the young man ripped the photographs they have obtained secretly, it is understood.

Employees around the airports are afraid to talk about them without first weighing their words.

"Be careful what you say," said one workman at Roosevelt field when a question was asked about the gangsters learning to fly. "There's always a bunch of them inside that room and they can hear through the walls."

"They passed out the word when they came out here to fly that no pictures were to be taken, and if anyone was taken it would make a man a fine wife. Why don't you marry?" She didn't answer and he looked up to find her head bent. It seemed that he had made a deep impression. Was she looking down because he had said something that made her sad? Perhaps it was to hide the mist in her eyes, or perhaps it was just her well-known shyness. But when she spoke, it was in an unemotional and extremely matter of fact voice.

"Do you think it is true," she demanded, "that my feet are as big as they say?"

Over at Floyd Bennett field the same fear exists. An employee said none of the boys there would take the chance of crossing the gangsters because they had received the same ultimatum as had been issued at Roosevelt.

"One of the boys here has some pictures, but he has been instructed not to release them until told he may," the mechanic said, and then added that "there sure will be the devil to pay now that the gangster story leaked out."

"They are supposed to get their training in airmanship with the utmost secrecy," said one younger pilot at the city owned airport. "Some of them are just about ready to solo, and I understand that at least two of the leaders have ordered planes."

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"Hop O' My Thumb" THOSE of us who have not forgotten our fairy book lore remember the famous dwarf as "Hop O' My Thumb."

At first thought, it might seem that this name was simply one chosen at random, and a name which is in itself contains no particular connection with its meaning.

This, however, would be an erroneous conclusion. For, as becomes obvious after the fact is known, Hop O' My Thumb is really an abbreviation of "hop over my thumb" in other words, a person of stature sufficiently small to jump over a thumb.

The expression came into use about the sixteenth century, and because it was a "natural," immediately became popular.

Hunter Provides Coast Chinese With "Courage"

Fort Bragg, Calif.—Frank Taaffe, Fort Bragg hunter, has probably the most unusual occupation in the world—that of supplying "courage" to San Francisco's Chinatown.

The Chinese—that is, those of the older generation—believe that to eat of the flesh of a wildcat is to endow the eater with courage and strength.

Taaffe supplies the wildcats, which he traps alive in the mountains near here, and ships in crates to San Francisco.

Glens Falls, N. Y.—A few boards laid across limbs of a tree served as the home of Harold Bennett, eighteen years old, the last few days. An orphan, he arrived late last week seeking a job. Penniless and friendless, he obtained boards to build the "floor" and limbs, blinds and tin to make up the remainder of his abode.

Police found the youth had no coverings and had not eaten for a day. He was taken to headquarters, fed and then turned over to the county home at Warrensburg.

Crisp, Sheer Frocks and Wide Brims

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

INTERPRETING formality through means of sheerest lovely cottons is fashion's way of doing it this summer. Designers are sparing no effort to impress upon their clientele that cottons have gone formal. The handsomest "dress-up" gowns which will apparel society's elite this summer as shown in recent couturier collections, are being made of such naive and prettily feminine cottons as crisp and sheer organdie, especially the embroidered types, dotted nets and voiles and similar weaves.

Going to wear big picture brims, too! Milliners say so. Top these winsome sheer cotton frocks with flattering wide picture brims and what have you—enchanted costumes such as inspire artists to get out canvas and brush, and poets to put fashions into verse.

It makes it the more interesting in that while these beguiling fashions are tuning to festive nights and formal afternoons when it comes to sports clothes and dress for the informal hours of the day, the mood of the mode changes completely in that the rule of smart tailored simplicity is being rigidly enforced. All of which goes to show that milady's wardrobe must be extremely versatile to meet the dress requirements of the 1932 summer season.

A dress that bespeaks summer evenings, garden parties, moonlight dances, graduations, weddings and summer festivities in general, is shown in the foreground of the accompanying illustration. It is seductively made, in the simplest possible lines, of a lovely duren-embroidered organdie, with an open-work effect between, slightly starched and infinitely feminine. Here we see the squarish wide shoulder line which is characteristic of the newer models broadened by means of coy little three-inch sleeves. The delicate patterning of the organdie is beautifully delineated and accomplishes a decidedly hand-embroidered look. If hand-embroidered, however, it would cost a fortune. As it is, it may be bought, without bankruptcy, by the yard, while comparatively inexpensive and charming frocks made of it may be purchased where pretty ready-mades are available.

Dotted organdie, red embroidered on a white background, is chosen for the other dress. By the way, you might like to know about the new organdies which are embroidered after the manner of dotted swiss. They are showing them in the newer fabric displays. It is not needed to call attention to the butterfly sleeves which give such sprightly lines to this chic model, for they are so out-of-the-ordinary they are sure to be noted at first glance. The butterfly silhouette, as it is referred to in the parlance of fashion, is very new and designers are playing it up in various ways.

The wide sash of red taffeta is crossed at the back and the streamers are brought around to the front where they are tied in a big bow as you see. This model would also be effective in organdie dotted with black as the latest Paris news is to the effect that black-and-white is gaining in favor for formal modes.

MODISH CAPE-WRAP

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

The new short cape wraps are fascinating. This one is of medic trans parent velvet in bright madcap blue. The white evening dress which it contrasts so effectively is made of demi clair crepe, which is one of the very new, very heavy semishimmer weaves which lead in fashion this season. It is smooth and dull and drapes gracefully in both daytime and evening modes.

THRIFTY FASHIONS ARE NOW SMARTEST

Thrifty fashions are often the smartest ones—at least that is the contention of a good many of the most important French dressmakers. Current French fashions, as illustrated by the style shows now going on in Paris, show a marked tendency toward more simple clothes and toward a general practicality.

One of the favorite examples of these new thrifty fashions is the suit whose jacket portion is a three-quarter coat. A coat of this type is considered neither an out-and-out jacket nor is it listed among the robes—so it results in sharing the advantages of each.

STYLE NOTES

High-colored buttons enliven white coats and dresses. It's the two-piece sports suit which is ultra smart.

Wide wale pique is a beach-wear favorite.

Brown and white, also navy and white prints lead.

Striped seersucker is newest material for the two-piece sports suits.

Guimpe frocks are in fashion for town wear.

Prints and embroideries favor the daisy motif.

Belt Fastener

One of the neatest tricks of the season is a belt which closes with a sliding fastener made of silver. When closed the fastener resembles an arrow as straight as Cupid's.

Shirred Chiffon

Shirred chiffon is back again. Jackets and bodices of the new semi-formal gowns are made entirely of shirring.

Fashion Notes of Interest to Women

Skirts for all occasions are cleverly flared.

The style slant on hats this season is straight.

Striped blouses are being shown in smart shops.

Keeping time with fashion these days means wearing clocked hosiery.

Vionnet is one of the important designers who has featured velvet right through her new collection.

Shoulder-cape collars distinguish the later knitted frocks.

Newest silhouette registers huge sleeves and snug waistline.

Deep detachable collars are made to button over backless tennis gowns.

Topcoats of washable fancy white cotton weaves are chic and practical.

Be sure to include in the summer wardrobe one of the new scarfs made of chiffon in pastel colors.

DINKELSBUHL CELEBRATES

A Dinkelsbühl Parade.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

DINKELSBUHL, quaint Bavarian town, is donning holiday attire. This summer it will celebrate the three hundredth anniversary of the raising of the siege of King Gustavus Adolphus' Swedish army, during the Thirty Years' war. Dinkelsbühl is one of Bavaria's medieval gems. Visitors to Bavaria, however, have heeded the call of its larger sister communities—Nuremberg, Rothenburg and Nördlingen—but have passed Dinkelsbühl by. Approaching Dinkelsbühl from across the lovely valley through which the tiny Wörnitz carries its waters to the rushing Danube, the traveler beholds a living fairy-tale town—a vision from the long-gone Middle Ages. Crossing a bridge over the broad, lily-padded moat which was once the city's first line of defense and entering through one of the tower gates, it would occasion little surprise to be challenged brusquely by some ancient sentinel in helmet and coat of mail. However, once within the town, the traveler finds a fascinating picture of serenity.

Tu urge for streets has not reached Dinkelsbühl; still echo to the clatter and clump of horses and oxen, the people live placidly, farming the fertile fields of the surrounding valley or conducting the same small enterprises which engaged the attention of generations of their forebears. There is no air of dilapidation about the place. Everything is incredibly old but extremely well preserved. Tradition is hallowed and kept alive here, and changes that would alter the medieval characteristics of the city are not tolerated. The council sees to it that when repairs have to be made on the houses they are carried out in such a manner as to preserve the original form, and no shrieking signs may be displayed.

A well known coffee company wished to open a branch in Dinkelsbühl. Permission to do so was given only on condition that the firm's regular signs, in glaring red, should not be used; and of this concern's many branch stores in Germany, only the one in Dinkelsbühl has to get along without its usual device.

The main streets of the city radiate toward the cardinal points from a central plaza and are lined with shops and with fine old patrician houses. Time-mellowed buildings, gabled and timbered, rest cozily against each other, while occasionally an architectural giant rears its steep-sided roof above the others, proclaiming to all comers its sturdy old age. Branching off from the main thoroughfare are narrow, winding lanes and side streets which abound in treasures of medieval artistry. Exquisite examples of frame and stucco building, intricate, hand-forged iron rails and gratings, and beautiful, secluded courts and gardens await the explorer of these enchanting byways.

In part, the various occupations are still confined to certain streets, as, for instance, the blacksmiths. In three so-called "smiths' streets" the masters stand at their forges and hammer out a gigantic anvil, horseshoes, wagon tires, scythes, and other implements. Rarely does one see an automobile in front of these shops. The principal clients are peasants, who come from the surrounding country, bringing their wagons, plows, and drags for repair.

Old Trades Survive.
Trades that are dying out in other places still exist in Dinkelsbühl. Coopers make barrels by hand in the open air. Coppersmiths hammer out pots and kettles, baking tins, and other utensils, for copper in the kitchen is still held in high esteem in the small cities and in country districts, and one of the few surviving pewter molders still plies his trade here.

Everywhere, hanging over the doorways, are wonderfully executed wrought-iron signs indicative of the activities carried on within. One might infer that at some time in Dinkelsbühl's history the guild of smiths was a power within the town. At any rate, the signs lend to the streets over which they swing a note of peculiar interest. As in so many South German towns, the houses are for the most part gaily painted. The color combinations are perhaps a bit startling, but they are always effective.

And flowers vie for color supremacy with the brightly tinted houses. No nook or cranny where a plant might grow has been overlooked. Masses of vines cover the garden walls, while nearly every house has its window boxes filled with petunias, geraniums, and other gay blooms. Wells and fountains are ringed about with the same living colors.

Overshadowing the market place, as indeed it overshadows everything else in the city, is the Church of Saint George, built during the latter part of the fifteenth century, when Dinkelsbühl was at the height of its influence. To the 5,000 inhabitants it represents something more than a place of worship. It is an expression of all the civic pride and aspirations of the sturdy old burghers who directed its erection. And right well they succeeded, for Saint George's is perhaps the finest late Gothic church in southern Germany. The design and execution of the structure were placed in the able hands of the master architect Nikolaus Eseler von Alpey. At the same time that he received this commission the city fathers of nearby Nördlingen engaged him to build their cathedral. But Nördlingers had just reason to complain of their bargain, for they saw little of the great artist. His heart was in the work at Dinkelsbühl, and there he spent most of his time. Saint George's was under construction for nearly half a century, and when the time came to build the great tower planned for it, funds were not available. The master's vision was never completely realized, but the stamp of his greatness abides in the interior with its soaring arched ceiling.

Dinkelsbühl was founded long before the Normans conquered England. More than a thousand years ago a group of Franconian peasant warriors had settled on an elevation in the Wörnitz valley. There, when not engaged in fighting for their existence against raiding Franks or Magyars, they raised grain. About the year 928, at the command of Emperor Heinrich the First, walls were erected around the tiny settlement, and there came into being a fortified city destined to withstand the strifes and intrigues of a millennium and to play an important role in the pageant of history which those ten centuries were to unfold.

Origin of City's Name.

There is division of opinion as to the origin of the city's name. Some authorities claim the early Franconian settlement was on a low hill (Bühl) belonging to a man named Dinko or Tinko. Thus Dinkelsbühl. Others assert that the chief crop of the locality gave the city its name, and that it means wheat (Dinkel) hill (Bühl). However the city came by its name, it prospered. The location was a favored one, easy of defense, and on a much-frequented route from the old Roman empire into Germany. As a well fortified city, Dinkelsbühl offered safety for travelers and became a popular stopping place for those who traversed the Roman Road. From the beginning it belonged to the Imperial Family, and its government passed by gift or grant or sale to various South German nobles. The famous Frederick Barbarossa intended at one time to give the city as a wedding present to his son Konrad, Duke of Rothenburg, but his plans miscarried, and nearly two centuries later, in 1351, Emperor Karl IV granted it as an hereditary fief to the prince of Oettingen. That same year the citizens bought the nobleman's rights from him in perpetuity and Dinkelsbühl began its career as a "free city."

Many of the emperors of the Holy Roman empire visited Dinkelsbühl and whenever one came there was a ceremonious reception on the market square, at which the council presented to the emperor and his entourage the "customary" gifts. What these amounted to is shown by a record in the municipal archives dealing with a visit of Emperor Maximilian II on June 12, 1570.

The Dinkelsbühlers have been known for centuries as "Die Blausieder," the blue cookers." A favorite method of serving carp, trout, and certain other fish in Germany is "blue cooked"—that is, boiled in water to which a little vinegar has been added. The process is called "blausieden," and those who do the "blue boiling" are "Blausieder."

In the early Middle Ages the authorities of Dinkelsbühl succeeded in catching a robber and murderer who had been carrying on his gruesome occupation for a long time. A special session of the council was called on a hot summer afternoon to decide what punishment to mete out to him. One of the councilmen, who was a trifle deaf, went to sleep during the debate and dreamed that his cook was about to prepare a fine carp for him. When the time came for him to vote on the question before the council, a fellow member poked him in the ribs and asked:

"Hannes, what do you say we shall do with our robber?"

Hannes, rudely awakened from his dream, thought it was his cook asking about the carp.

"Blausieden!" (Boil him blue), he answered.

Neither the robber nor anybody else has been boiled in Dinkelsbühl, but good food is still held in high esteem—and good drink not less. Following ancient custom, the men come together every Friday evening, at different inns, in turn for their "social evening." There, round the flowing bowl, they smoke their long pipes and discuss the burning questions of the day with great zeal.

FLYER BROUGHT TO DEATH BY SEAGULL

Untimely Fate of Early Air Navigator.

The two and three thousand mile non-stop flights which are undertaken by flyers in these days with little thought given to the mechanical difficulties which might arise contrast strangely with the first really long-distance flight in this country a little more than 20 years ago.

History was made when Cal Rogers, advertising a beverage known as Vin Fizz, left Mineola on his epoch flight to the Pacific coast. The preparations for his flight were not so simple as the loading up of the plane with sufficient gas and oil and the preparation of a little lunch to sustain the airman during his long flight.

There were no mapped out air routes, no radio weather reports, no emergency landing fields, no spare parts to be picked up en route—no airport if it should prove necessary to replace some falling piece of equipment and if something went wrong high up in the air there—as no parachute to let him safely down to earth.

His plans were far more intricate. To answer the problem of a route, he chose various rail lines as his route and he flew a meandering route as the trains meandered. His landing fields were indicated to him, not by beacons, but by the crowds waiting below to see him land. It was usually the circus field which was chosen. He had no need for advance weather reports, for his daily flights hardly carried him from one weather zone into another. The problem of spare parts was answered by a baggage car which accompanied him along the rail line carrying enough parts to build an entire plane.

When all was set for the start of his historic flight, he hopped off from Mineola for Middletown, N. Y., the tremendous distance of 70 miles away. He came through about on schedule and was greeted uproariously by a crowd that marveled at the distance flown in a single day. Waiting for him in Middletown was a purse raised among the excited citizens, who felt that he highly honored that it should be chosen as the starting place of the historic flight.

Having reached Middletown, Rogers decided that he had done his quota of flying for that day, and stayed overnight. The next morning after several hours of preparation while the impatient crowd waited to see its first take-off, the Vin Fizz flyer finally taxied down the field and started. Insufficient speed, however, prevented him from attaining the necessary altitude to clear some trees bordering the field and in dodging them he struck a telephone wire that nosed his plane over. Fortunately Rogers escaped with only a few bruises, and the repairs to his plane were relatively simple and he was able to leave on the following day.

Two months of flying finally brought him to the coast, where he was received with great enthusiasm. While in San Francisco he gave a number of exhibition flights, on one of which he met his death. A seagull, running about the plane, became wedged in one of the wires of his rudder and the plane nosed down into the bay, taking the life of the man who had survived what were then considered the almost impossible hazards of flying clear across the country.

No Occupation

A teacher was explaining to a third-grade class what the word occupation meant. She asked each child to tell what his father's occupation was. All responded except one.

"Pauline," queried the teacher. "What work does your father do?"

"Oh," responded the eight-year-old with a superior air. "My father doesn't have to work; he's a salesman."

"Humanitarian" Dog

An unusual dog is owned by a farmer of Bajarg, Ayrshire, Scotland. He is a black and white collie. He was seen catching a rabbit; but evidently was sensitive as to the spilling of blood and refused to worry the rabbit to death. Instead of that, he hauled his captive to a burn, where he held its head under water till it was drowned. He has never, the farmer says, done other than drown his rabbits.

A decade ago Australia produced practically no tobacco and cotton, importing the bulk of these products from the United States. Both crops, however, have increased so rapidly under the protection of the commonwealth government that all domestic requirements will be supplied this year and there will be an exportable surplus next year.

Here's the Watchdog of Your Profits

McCormick-Deering No. 3 Field Cultivator

MAYBE it's Quack or Johnson Grass... perhaps it's some other noxious weed... but—nine chances out of ten—weeds in your fields are stealing fertility from your crops and lowering your yields and profits.

After deep plowing, use this McCormick-Deering Field Cultivator on your land and yank out those fertility-robbing weeds by the roots. Then rake them up and burn them!

This cultivator is great for summer-fallow, alfalfa cultivation, or seed-bed preparation. It does good work under all conditions because its entire weight can be thrown on the gangs when the going is tough.

Bring your weed problem to us. We can supply this cultivator in different sizes with sweeps best suited for attacking your weeds.

Highest Paid Short Fiction Writer

FANNIE HURST is the highest paid short story writer in the world today. There's a good reason for that. She knows human nature and under the magic of her touch, the people about whom she writes become real people, not mere literary creations. The plots of her stories are based on incidents from real life as it is lived every day by the common people.

Such are the stories which are appearing in this newspaper. Be sure to read them and talk to your friends about them, for they like interesting stories, too. And Fannie Hurst's stories are interesting stories.

LABOR DAY

READY and WAITING

THE sentinel on duty, standing ready and waiting to carry civilization back and on to new comforts and greater joys in living, is Labor. Through the dark days of trying times it has been Labor which has stood the brunt . . . carried the greater load and waited patiently for that rift in the clouds of depression which would mark the dawn of better days . . . Through the long period of readjustment, Labor has suffered losses it could no more afford than other ill favored classes, but withal Labor has shown its willingness to meet the situation fairly and squarely and today faces the new era, anxious and willing to carry on upon any basis that the new order of economics may dictate—Labor, like all classes, has come back to first principals and has learned anew that there is no lasting joy in existence except in honest toil—Honest toil and a fair return with the opportunity to again prove its worth is all that Labor asks—And this opportunity will be given—so surely as the sun rises in the East—Why?—Because we are one hundred and twenty millions of people with an appreciation of the better things in life and a willingness to work and work hard to have and enjoy them . . . Soon now the grinding mill-stones of deflation will have reduced to powder the inflated grains of false values, and business, work, will resume. Speed the day. We are all wiser, more humble, more willing to step in and do our share of the work. We are Labor.

Up-to-the-Minute and Practical

Every woman wishes to be as well-dressed as possible without spending too much time or money on her clothes. That is why so many women in this community turn first to the page in this newspaper which contains the illustrated fashion articles by Miss Cherie Nicholas. For Miss Nicholas is an authority on fashions—not the freak models and the extreme styles, but the fashions in dress which the modern woman demands, those which are up-to-the-minute and at the same time economical and practical.

Be sure to look for these articles in each issue of this newspaper and then tell your women friends about them. They will be glad to know how they, too, can wear clothes which carry the message of the well-dressed woman.

Those who cherish fond memories of pink lemonade of circus days will surely enjoy an ice cold milk drink made by adding a tablespoon or two of the syrups from canned raspberries or strawberries to a glass of milk, home economists suggest.

WEST BEND 6, NORTH FONDY 4

Charlie Ingram, southpaw of West Bend, brought the Benders to within one game from first place when his team mates turned tables on the Tigers at North Fond du Lac and in a tenth inning rally scoring four runs, won the ball game, final score, West Bend 6, North Fond du Lac 4. Ingram had very good control, struck out eleven men, allowed ten scattered hits and passed none. Hable struck out 7, allowed 6 hits and walked five. West Bend was charged with 4 errors, while the Tigers made 3. The Tigers made a very strong bid to overcome the 4 run tally in their half of the tenth but lost their opportunity when Faris tried to stretch a two base hit into a three bagger scoring two runs ahead of him. No runner on either side got past second base until the fifth frame. Score by innings:

INDIANS 9, CASCADE 4

The Indians still have to meet their first defeat of the season. Last Sunday they took the long end of the score by taking into camp the strong Cascade boys, 9 to 4. Klahn did the twirling for the Indians and pitched a good game. Tomorrow, Sunday, the Indians go to Wayna for a return game. Marx is expected to be on the mound.

NORTH FOND DU LAC HERE SUNDAY

On Sunday the league leaders, the North Fond du Lac Tigers will make their final appearance for the season on the local diamond. The Tigers and the locals are fifty-fifty, each team having defeated the other one game. In the game at North Fond du Lac several weeks ago the locals blew up and permitted the Tigers to score 10 runs in one inning. This blow-up the locals have not forgotten and are out to redeem themselves. Habel will be on the mound for the Tigers with Pommerville on the receiving end. Wisniewski and Kral will be delegated the battery work for the locals. The Tigers come here as the hardest hitting team in the league. We predict a victory for Kewaskum. Give the boys your support. Game will be called at 2:30 the usual time.
