BRITAIN DEFAULTS ON ITS WAR DEBT

Note Says It Is Waiting for Revision.

Washington.—Great Britain told the United States that it will make no more payments on its $5,000,000,000 war debt until this country consents to a downward revision of the obligation.

The decision of Great Britain, largest of the war debtors, to default on the debt installment due June 5 opens the way for a general default of all debtor nations and at least the temporary end of war debt payments. Whether the United States can ever collect another dollar from the nations which owe $12,500,000,000 today became one of the major diplomatic questions before the Roosevelt administration, officials admit.

The British determination to default apparently was precipitated by a curt reminder which President Roosevelt sent them telling them that they would owe $86,000,000 on June 15 and that they were already in arrears $170,000,000, a total of $262,000,000.

The President's note, which was made public by the State department, merely listed the amounts due and informed the British that "payment may be made either at the treasury in Washington or at the Federal Reserve Bank of New York."

The British government in its note insisted that it is not repudiating its debt but merely awaiting a debt revision. At the same time, however, the British note declared that attempts at debt revision at this time would be fruitless. Although the note did not say so bluntly, the British position was thus revealed as refusing to make payments until the debt is revised and at the same time declining to discuss debt revision.

"Unfortunately recent events have shown that discussions on the whole subject with a view to a final settlement cannot at present be usefully renewed," the note stated.

The British decision was conveyed to the State department in a note signed by the British ambassador, Sir Ronald Lindsay.

At the same time, Finland maintained her proud record as the only nation to meet every debt installment in full. Minister L. Astrom advised Under Secretary Phillips Finland would pay in cash the $106,538 due June 15. A new agreement, greatly reducing the interest paid by Finland was concluded recently, but has not been submitted to the senate for ratification.

In addition to this unprecedented grant of power to dip unhindered into the nation's coffers, the house approved a new cash appropriation of a $1,172,000,000, also to be expended virtually as the President pleases, for the alphabetical emergency agencies of his administration.

BURNING STEAMSHIP RACES INTO PORT

Hints of Sabotage on Vessel President Lincoln.

Honolulu.—A possibility that attempts at sabotage were to blame for the fire at sea on the Dollar liner President Lincoln was expressed by Capt. George Yardley after the ship raced into Honolulu with her lifeboats swinging from the davits and many of the passengers wearing life preservers.

The fire, which broke out in the hold of the vessel imperiling nearly 400 persons aboard, was brought under control by the crew before the liner reached port.

Captain Yardley, skipper of the President Lincoln, said the blaze probably was caused by spontaneous combustion in the inflammable cargo, but that there was a possibility of sabotage having been attempted.

Two military airplanes shipped by the Curtis-Wright corporation and destined for the Chinese government were in the blazing hold when the ship reached port. The planes had been stored near the point where the fire broke out. They were unloaded for examination.

Escorted into the harbor by a navy tug, the ship docked at dawn with the cargo in her main hold still smoldering. The tug, which had stood by off Koko Head, near the harbor entrance, throughout the night ready to give aid, immediately began pumping water into the smoking compartment.

News that the liner was afire was made known to the 172 passengers at the captain's dinner. Captain Yardley assured the passengers there was no cause for alarm but instructed them to return quietly to their staterooms and put on life preservers.

Soon smoke was pouring into many cabins in the after part of the vessel and the passengers took to the decks. There they remained until midnight while the crew, numbering 226, battled the blaze with live steam.

The ship was about 150 miles out of Honolulu, westbound from San Pedro, when the fire was discovered in a hold which contained cotton as a part of the cargo.

COTTON TEXTILE STRIKE AVERTED

Employers and Union Reach a Compromise.

Washington.—Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, NRA administrator, forestalled a strike of 400,000 cotton textile workers by working out a compromise between employers and union representatives. Dissolution of the textile strike threat removed one of the gravest crises facing the NRA and the recovery program.

The settlement of the textile troubles was agreed to by Thomas F. McMahon, president of the United Textile Workers of America, and George Sloan, head of the Cotton Textile Institute. The settlement was the outcome of two days of sweltering negotiations by Johnson, the textile mills owners, and the union leaders.

As soon as the final agreement had been reached, union leaders here telegraphed their local leaders in the field that the strike was off. They reserved their right to strike, however, saying in a formal statement merely that "the strike will not take effect Monday morning."

As a result of the agreement the employers are allowed to go through with their program of curtailing production 25 per cent despite labor's protests, and the laborers receive the promise of an NRA investigation into the question of higher wages and other points of difference.

Within 14 days the NRA research division is to report on what wage increases the cotton textile industry can stand. Within 10 days it is to report on the question of curtailing working hours so that production will not exceed consumption. Within 30 days the NRA will report on the question of the industry's alleged violation of the code on wage differentials.

Beside obtaining these promises, the union was assured of increased representation on the industrial relations board of the cotton textile code authority and on the NRA's labor advisory board.

Toledo, Ohio.—Officials of the Electric Auto-Lite company ratified an agreement ending the long and bitter strike that was climaxed by savage rioting. "Roosevelt Risks" Are Not Taken by Lloyds

London.—Large scale insurance speculation on President Roosevelt's future has been stopped in London at the request of the British foreign office. For the past few days, according to the Daily Mail, there have been considerable demands at Lloyds for insurance policies on the actuarial possibilities of the death or assassination of President Roosevelt.

Washington was gravely concerned by the news, and instructed Ambassador Robert Worth Bingham to make immediate representations to the British government.

As a result, members of Lloyds received a letter from Foreign Secretary Sir John Simon in which he "requested" them as a matter of diplomatic courtesy to refuse insurance risks on President Roosevelt's future.

At a special meeting of Lloyds committee it was decided to put members on their honor not to deal in "Roosevelt risks" and immediate steps were taken to terminate such speculation.

To prevent the occurrence of habit in the poultry flock, oyster or limestone grit should be fed before the birds all the time. Eat of the coarse particles of the dust, the grit of oyster should be stirred occasionally.

Vitamin D is supplied in oil. If the flock is not enough of this substance an egg supply should be allowed, but none has been fed the omission be corrected. An eighth of a day for 100 birds is recommended. This can be fed on the grain mash.

"You'd better stop thinking... we friends again?" Muriel asked.

"Well that's a relief!" He drew a long breath. "Tonight we'll celebrate. We'll drive out to Riverside after the dark."

"Just nothing at all but a smile." "I don't seem quite sure."

"Aunt Lucy was having a garden party at 'Sportsman's Hall.' The party was not confined exclusively to the garden, however. In fact, no one was to be seen in the garden at all unless led by Uncle Frank to admire his roses."

"Aren't you glad I kidnaped you?" Hugh, in his bathing suit, lay among the moss and pine needles on the bank at the tip of the point.

"You didn't, exactly," Janie, sitting on a blanket to protect her party frock, gave a little bounce of pleasure. "I just came tagging along."

"Well, anyway, we're here," Hugh stretched lazily. "Was it a nice party? What did you do, Janie?"

He chuckled. "It mules can produce all this—" His sweeping gesture included the glorified farm house, the oaks and the beech trees, the lawns and river itself, sparkling and blue in the sunshine.

"Aunt Lucy needn't worry, I guess," Janie said gravely. "Tom wouldn't know Muriel was alive if Cella were here."

"What time is it, Uncle Charlie?" The old man consulted a ponderous watch. "Half past four. If something had happened to Hugh!"

"That's the way the wind blows," Great-uncle Charlie observed to Jeff. "When Cella comes home there'll be ructions. My saluted Aunt Maria! I wish—I hope I'll be asleep!"

"I sat on the grass with my feet stretched out so people would admire my slippers."

"You baby," he said. "You dear little funny kid."

"What is it, little fellow?" "I-I feel sort of chilly, Hugh, please take me home."

Horatio stopped, with its customary protest, in front of the old brick house. Janie saw a spurt of light in the living room and then through the buff-tinted blinds a soft and flickering glow. Mother must have called. But why was she lighting the candles? It seemed a little odd.

Hugh had swum out so far that his head was a glint in the distance. The current was strong. If something should happen to Hugh! There, thank goodness, he was stroking it back to shore.

"Light me a cigarette." "You're the laziest person I know." "My hands are wet."

"Your hands are perfectly dry." "But you do it so well." A teasing smile. "You are a good little egg."

"That's the way I thought of you," he said softly. "Lilies-of-the-valley." Janie didn't wait to hear any more. She rushed out through the kitchen, up the back stairs, along the second floor hall and up to her own quiet room. It was a peaceful haven, comforting and familiar. She flung herself face down on the bed and cried a little and kicked at the counterpane with her feet.

"I'm glad you didn't get yourself sunburned." Mother, too, was looking at Cella, all white and creamy and pink. "Janie looks like a gypsy."

"I like gypsy girls," he said with a quick warm smile. Janie felt a lump in her throat. Father, she thought, was the dearest person in all the world.

It made everything different, Cella being at home. Muriel invited them out for tea, Cella and Janie and Hugh. This time Hugh didn't suggest that they slip away up into the woods. He sat on the lawn and looked at Cella in her wide-brimmed lilac hat. Janie sat on the grass gazing her knees in her arms as silent as a small bronze statue. Muriel smoked cigarettes and looked decidedly bored.

Tom McAllister joined them presently. He had been talking legal affairs with Uncle Frank. Tom drew up a wicker chair and he, too, looked at Cella in her wide-brimmed lilac hat. Hugh, occasionally, made an effort to include Janie and Muriel in the conversation. Tom looked at Cella, a quizzical smile twisting the left corner of his mouth. It was a smile which seemed to say, "I am not deceived by your poses but I think you are beautiful." Tom always looked at Cella that way.

"Janie is devoted to that playground," she would say in the presence of a caller. "She's such a busy little bee. She makes me feel like a butterfly."

"I think he's nice-looking," Janie's cheeks were unusually pink. "And he's getting along so well. Father says Hugh is a born doctor."

"You Don't Mind Such Things. I'm So Absurdly Sensitive."

Little Janie. "But the atmosphere depresses me so, sickness and suffering and pain. You wouldn't understand, Janie dear. You don't mind such things. I'm so absurdly sensitive."

From which Janie gathered, with a lifting of her spirits, that Cella had no ambition to be a doctor's wife. The feeling of happiness vanished, however, when she saw him standing in the hall late that afternoon watching Cella walk down the stairs. Cella wore a frock of sheer white swiss with a tight bodice and a full ankle-length skirt. At her waist was a small corsage of lilies-of-the-valley tied with loops of green ribbon. Janie saw the admiring expression in Hugh's brown eyes, heard his quick indrawn breath.

"That's the way I thought of you," he said softly. "Lilies-of-the-valley." Janie didn't wait to hear any more. She rushed out through the kitchen, up the back stairs, along the second floor hall and up to her own quiet room. It was a peaceful haven, comforting and familiar. She flung herself face down on the bed and cried a little and kicked at the counterpane with her feet.

"I'm glad you didn't get yourself sunburned." Mother, too, was looking at Cella, all white and creamy and pink. "Janie looks like a gypsy."

Another beach costume goes definitely Turkish with a so-called skirt reaching to the middle of the calf, suggesting the sultan's trousers. Bloused fullness in front is caught at the hemline, and there are slits bound in vivid cotton braid, for the legs. The garment is really trousers, but looks like a skirt, or vice versa.

Here's to a Smart Summer Wardrobe

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

TURN to the east or turn to the west or turn to the spot you love best where to tarry a while in the good old summertime. Unless your wardrobe be well stocked with timely and practical as well as chic and pretty apparel your vacation is apt to count nil in the way of uplifting joy and satisfaction.

Reducing the formula for smart vacation clothes to its simplest, firstly a tailored-to-perfection ensemble for general daytime wear; secondly, a casual frock with swanky details for active sports wear; and thirdly, a sheer and lovely formal of alluringly feminine charm ought to go a far way toward helping start one's summer vacation style program in the right direction.

Beginning with the tailored ensemble centered in the group, we feel we can recommend it as having all the necessary attributes to render it eligible for election as a fashion-supreme for general daytime wear. With all its summy daintiness when it comes to actual hard wear and tear it is a sturdy little affair designed to give real service. One of several reasons why you can depend upon it is that it is made of a soft yet firm Irish linen which is everlasting when it comes to color, is easily washable and best of all it is unscrupulous which counts a lot when one is on the go from morning to night. The dress is natural.

Now that the influence of practically every other nation has been seen in beach wear, along comes the Scotch trend, which presents as the last word in resort fashions a brief Scotch plaid skirt to wear over your swim suit. And if you're so minded you may have a plaid sun hat or beret to match. Vivid plaid belts and shoulder straps also are blossoming out on some of the newest bathing suits, otherwise in solid colors.

Another beach costume goes definitely Turkish with a so-called skirt reaching to the middle of the calf, suggesting the sultan's trousers. Bloused fullness in front is caught at the hemline, and there are slits bound in vivid cotton braid, for the legs. The garment is really trousers, but looks like a skirt, or vice versa.

Feathers are an outstanding trim for evening gowns. Ostrich is the favorite and is seen in many versions, forming capes or shoulder accents.

HOLDS UNIVERSE TO BE RESULT OF EXPLODING ATOM

Once upon a time, some 10,000,000,000 years ago, a primordial atom, perhaps the size of an orange, exploded.

The resulting fireworks developed through the ages into suns and stars and nebulous groups of heavenly bodies which we call the universe.

That is the picture of creation painted by Abbe George Lemaitre, of the University of Louvain, Belgium, a profound mathematician, physicist and astronomer.

"In the beginning," he declared, "all matter in the universe existed in a small atom. That atom burst, similar to the manner in which radium explodes, and its fragments evolved into heavenly bodies."

"The universe still is expanding, and the day may come when we will all freeze to death. That, of course, may be billions of years from now."

"Spook" Was Burglar

Stories of a white-clad ghost seen walking in a suburban cemetery of Istanbul, Turkey, frightened the residents. Police investigations, however, disclosed that the "spook" was an enterprising burglar, who dressed himself up in white flowing robes, to alarm householders, while he practiced his regular profession.

Why the air-sealed vault protects
TRY THIS TEST
Hold an ordinary drinking glass upside down in an empty pan. Then fill the pan with water.

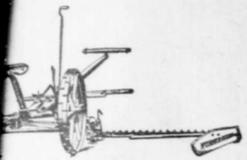

Notice that, no matter how wet the outside of the glass becomes, the inside remains dry. This demonstrates an inflexible principle of physics, that water cannot enter unless the air is first displaced.

The Buckstaff Burial Vault works on the same principle. It is a large metal bell. It keeps out ground waters by air pressure, just as does the glass. Each vault is tested by submerging it in water under 5000 pounds pressure.

The cost of the Buckstaff Burial Vault is very moderate. Many families consider it as necessary as the casket.

AN AFFAIR OF HONOR

By THAYER WALDO
© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WNU Service.

WITH Margaret on his arm, Ward strode proudly into the Purple Hat. It was thickly peopled, for he had purposely chosen the busiest luncheon hour. Half the men in Hollywood had been trying for a date with the little aristocrat from Kentucky ever since her arrival, and his success was worth a flourish.

Ward paused just inside, ostensibly seeking a table. The golden-haired beauty beside him clung close with gratifying familiarity. Suddenly he saw a man emerge from a nearby booth and come toward them. It was Al Alberts of the scenario staff at Zenith.

Ward started a cordial greeting but checked it at sight of the other's smiling face.

Alberts confronted him and said evenly:

"See here, Ward; you're trespassing. Miss Blair promised me a luncheon appointment today."

Ward laughed shortly.

"Don't be absurd, old fellow," he rejoined; "you're just trying to attract attention."

"No; I'm entirely serious. I must ask you to withdraw."

From the corner of his eye Ward could see a number of persons watching interestedly. Among them he recognized the film editor of a leading afternoon paper. A wild impulse was born. He glanced swiftly at the girl; her cheeks were coloring and a haughty little scowl crinkled her forehead.

That decided him.

Snatching a napkin from the nearest table, he wheeled and slapped it smartly across the Alberts face.

"Take that, you insolent whelp!" he shouted with unnecessary volume. "This affront to mademoiselle can only be treated as an affair of honor."

Eyes blazing, the scenarioist cried: "Very well, sir; I am at your service."

Silently Ward applauded the speech, it fit the scene he had attempted to create with nicety. He made a brief stiff bow and said:

"Excellent. I invite you to come with me at once and make the arrangements. This must be kept private to avoid interference."

"Good; I accept."

Ward faced Margaret Blair.

She was large-eyed now, and he thought he could detect excited approval in her expression.

"Will you," he asked, "have the goodness to forgive me if I leave you with a friend here and go? My hot blood can't tolerate such insulting conduct."

"Oh, suahly!" Her tone implied full understanding. "You'd have to do that now of course."

Approaching the newspaperman, Ward said:

"Melvin, I'd be deeply obliged if you'd see that Miss Blair has lunch and gets back to the studio."

The editor rose, beaming. "Okay—be very happy."

Ward about-faced and with Alberts matching step, stalked from the place, happily conscious that all eyes followed.

Fifty paces the two men marched in silence; then:

"Have you ever handled a sword?" Ward demanded bluntly. The other shook his head.

"Never even held one."

"Neither have I. We'll have to figure some way around it. That was too good an act back there not to carry on."

"I'll say so! How did you happen to think of striking me with the napkin? That was real genius."

"Oh, because Maggie Blair was there. I guess, old southern gesture, and all that. But the best thing was the way you approached me. What suggested that?"

"Well, she really did promise to have lunch with me; and then, I saw Melvin and thought how he'd like a nice spicy story."

"I got it. Same reason I challenged you. Now I've been considering, and here's what I think might work out best."

At Alberts gave scrupulous attention. When the other concluded, he stated with emphasis:

"Great! That's the one plan that can save our faces and still be straight. Let's get 'em right now, and then we can go to my apartment for the art work."

"Right." Ward glanced back, made certain they weren't followed, and hailed a cab. Both men got in. Ward told the driver:

"Great Western Costume company."

Five minutes' ride through the scant midday traffic reached the place. Entering, they went at once to a long desk just inside; over it was painted a sign: PROPERTIES RENTAL DEPT.

"We want," Ward said to the man in charge, "two duelling swords. One day's rental; you can pick 'em up tomorrow at Zenith."

With professional disinterest the clerk made out a slip, got Ward's signature, and disappeared into a rear room.

Shortly he returned, bringing a paper-wrapped parcel from which protruded two gleaming hilts. Alberts tucked it under his arm and they left.

An hour later, seated before a window that overlooked the wooded banks of Laurel canyon, Ward was giving himself careful scrutiny in a hand mirror.

The countenance it showed had undergone a gaudy transformation.

Splices of mercurochrome were spaced by court plaster patches; the effect was something between a major surgical and a severe case of scarlet fever.

"Thanks; practically perfect, seems to me," he told the other at last, putting the glass down. "And you—well, that mug's enough to strike awe in the hearts of strong men, if I do say it myself."

Alberts chuckled, stood up, and clicked his heels together.

"Honored opponent," he said, bending forward at the waist; "may I tender my respects at the close of this epic struggle which has ended in a draw? Let us hope our sons copy our virtues bold."

"Seconded. What this world needs is more virility and less shoddy numbing. . . . Say, what about the swords; think they ought to be unwrapped and done up in different paper?"

Alberts gestured carelessly. "No; that guy'll never notice details. Come on—let's have dinner sent up. I'm starved and we don't dare go out. But tomorrow we'll reap the rewards of valor. And remember—it's to be fair competition for Margaret Blair, and may the best liar win!"

and so, after ten minutes of terrific fighting with no advantages on either side, I finally began to force him back step by step. Ward paused; through the knot of auditors clustered about he glimpsed, across the lot, a similar group surrounding Alberts.

"I only hope," he stated stiffly, "that that gentleman over there is rendering me my just due, as I am his to him."

"Let's see; where was I?" The spectators were drawing back to make way for some one.

In an instant the eagerly concerned face of Margaret Blair appeared.

"Oh, my dear! she cried at sight of Ward. "Yowh so heroic lookin'! What happened?"

He smiled upon her with expansive delight.

"Well, I was just explaining. We had a titanic battle, but at last I made one lightning lunge and—"

Again slight commotion as another newcomer shoved through the press from behind and tapped Ward's shoulder.

He turned sharply, frowning, and recognized the fellow from the costumers.

"Those swords," the fellow said; "where are they? I gotta have 'em right away."

Ward waved him impatiently aside.

"Yes, yes; not just now. Can't you see I'm busy? . . . Well, he tried to parry the thrust, but—"

"Hey, I tell you I can't wait. It's important."

Drawing himself up, Ward swung full upon the man with a fearsome glower.

"I said later! Certainly you don't need them badly enough to warrant—"

"Yeah—I do, though." The property man's tone was doggedly persistent. "I just got a call from Paramount for two rubber swords, and those are the only ones we have."

Storm Prevents Battle

At one time during the World war Britain's grand fleet and the German high sea fleet were only 42 miles from each other, each arrayed for battle—a battle between two mighty fleets which never occurred because the German commander in chief, relying upon vital wireless information from a certain airship, scurried back to shelter, the airship in question having been compelled to turn aside from her course to avoid a thunderstorm and unable to secure the information wanted.

Ancient Stocks in England

Visitors to England passing through the village of Albury, Hertfordshire, a few miles from London, may see the old village stocks where vagrants, trespassers, poachers and ne'er-do-wells had their ankles pinioned in a pair of notched planks. Several could be dealt this cruel type of justice at one time.

Conditional

"And what is the rent of this room, including the use of the piano?" inquired the long-haired one.

"Well," suggested the landlady, "perhaps you'd be so good as to pay me something first."

Pearls

Pearls of culture generally possess a finer structure than those of accidental growth. This is due to the smaller amount of organic matter which is consumed and secreted by the oysters, which live in well cleaned cages. "Natural" pearls contain on an average 2 per cent of water, but those of "culture" contain less than this, an important factor after the pearl has dried out.

Cause and Effect

"You played rather poorly at the bridge party last night, old man."

"Yeh, I'd seen the prizes."

Too Pallid

"Cup o' tea, weak," said a customer at a London coffee stall. When the decoction was brought to him he eyed it critically.

"Well, what's wrong with it? You said weak, didn't you?"

"Weak yes," was the reply, "but not 'elpless."

A RACKET

"It seems as though women have a mania for spending money."

Extensive Observation

"Out of a job, eh?"

"Yes. But I'm going to get a good situation in the millinery department of a big store."

"Why, what do you know about millinery?"

"All there is to know. I've been working for several years as a United States customs inspector."

Colonists of Maryland the First to Uphold Man's Freedom of Conscience

It is not surprising that the colonists who founded Maryland sought religious liberty for themselves, but it was a novel proceeding that, in an age when Christendom was torn by fratricidal strife because of differences in creed, they should promise to give the same privilege of freedom of conscience to all others that came to live with them.

While as yet there was no spot in Europe or America where men's religious convictions were too sacred to be invaded by tests of state or assailed by the forces of bigotry, Lord Baltimore's first order to his colonists was that there should be no difference on account of religion.

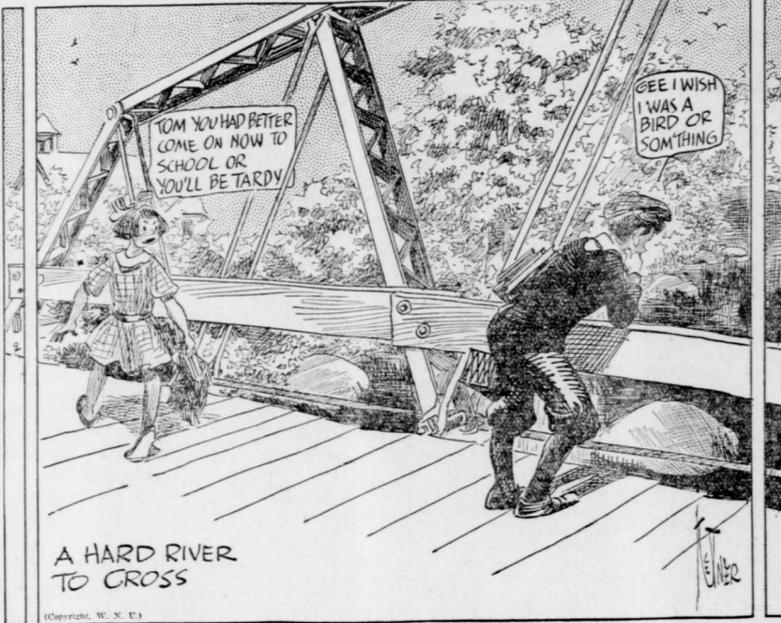

The records show that at first both Catholics and Protestant sects used a community church; that a proclamation was issued in 1638 for the suppression of "disputes tending to the opening of a faction in religion." And an act of the assembly declared that "no person professing to believe in Jesus Christ shall be troubled, molested, or discontinued, for, or in respect of, his or her religion."

Thus Protestant and Catholic dwelt together in harmony, neither attempting to interfere with the rights of worship of the other, and "religious liberty obtained a home, its only home in the wide world, at the humble village which bore the name of St. Marys."—Bulletin National Geographic Society.

SISTENT DIET WAY TO REDUCE

Pounds Can Be Taken Off by Proper Eating.

By EDITH M. BARBER

Are you overweight? I mean, are you really overweight? You can tell for yourself if you will look at the weight tables prepared by the Extension Institute. They show the average weight for height for men and women. For the average for thirty years of age, a generation ago, this weight would seem very low, but it would seem the slim figure of today's women. That "Goat" on Beer Signs Is an "Algerian Aoudad" Cincinnati.—Beer drinkers who know their animals will order "Algerian aoudad beer" when going a-quaffing these days—at least, according to Sol Stephan of the Cincinnati zoo, who deposes that the animal appearing on the beer advertisements is not a goat but an Algerian aoudad. In the second place, he affirms, the aoudad is not a goat but a sheep.

Wood-Burning Lorry Is Developed by Japanese

Tokyo, Japan.—Japan's wood-burning motor truck recently developed by the army probably will be confined largely to army use because of the inability to supply sufficient fueling stations to make a more general use available.

"All Aboard for the Juvenile Bus Special"

A wooden bus, drawn by a tricycle and jammed with gleeful youngsters, made its appearance in Cen. at Park West, New York City. The bus was constructed entirely by six and seven-year-old children at the Walden school. It has seats for six, straps for "sardines" and a place to hang on behind.

Joe Miller of Joke Book Fame

—Joseph Miller, famous as never made, was born in 1850 and recently a group of his descendants, comedians and writers of show material did the Theater Cafe at 1590 N. Dearborn and a plaque was placed on the wall in his name—the joke that he was one of the wisest of his day, whereas the re-

67 Widows Mourn Late King of Zulus

of the trucks were tried out between Tokyo and Nagoya.

It was found necessary, however, to have an extra motor conveyance accompany the truck on its trial run to supply the fuel, which must be in small sizes.

Japan spends some 150,000,000 yen for motor fuel annually and the army's expenditures are large. The wood burner was developed to cut down the normal expenses rather than to provide a new and economical war machine.

HOW IT STARTED

By JEAN NEWTON

Why Do We Call Them "Bluchers?"

IT TAKES quite a deal to have almost anything named after one. Even streets, of which there are and must be of necessity so many, are named with great care. So that there are few people of whom it can be said truly that they are commemorated by having named after them such and such an avenue.

And when it comes to things other than streets, then indeed must one be worthy to be deserving of having one's name go down to posterity in the form of having it applied to any particular object.

So that it is with all proper deference that we recount the fact that "bluchers"—commonly known as military half-boots—were first worn by the famous Field Marshal Gebhard von Blucher.

Old Warship Bells to Be Sold by British Navy

London.—The British admiralty has put a price on the old ships' bells from war vessels now being scrapped and offers them for sale to naval officers. It is asking $50 each for the ships' bells of the cruiser Bacchante, which was at the Dardanelles; the battleship Dominion, which served in the North sea; the battleship Hercules, which took part in the Battle of Jutland; the battleship Mars, which served in the Dardanelles, and the Perthshire. Other bells, including those on submarines, are offered at from $25 to $5 each.

Purchasers are asked to state the nature of their sentimental claim to any particular bell.

Springfield, Mo.—Marion Baker of the city fire department has a domestic record which he offers anyone in the country to challenge. Although he refrained from a formal declaration, he intimated that he would accept the nomination of the Revolutionary party to run for the presidency in the next election. Grau San Martin was so affected by the reception that he had to have medical treatment.

Lights of New York

By L. L. STEVENSON

For the last few years, adult Americans have been turning their attention more and more to pastimes that in the past belonged solely to children. So at the toy fair, which each spring makes the upper Thirties the toy capital of the country, there were playthings to keep grownups amused along with hundreds of others designed to make childhood hours happier and busier. In fact, in this mechanical age, this observer had difficulty in determining where one left off and the other began. For instance, there were electric trains with all kinds of accessories ranging from scales for weighing cars to automatic couplers. Curious as it may seem, the intricate trains were for the youngsters whose parents could afford to buy them, while for the parents there were far simpler trains. The essential difference, it seems, is that the toy trains for adults come in pairs so that there may be betting as to which can make the faster time.

Emphasis seems to have been placed on the gambling instinct as far as toys for adults are concerned. Racing trains had as companions parlor horse races, dog races, and even rabbit races. Then, too, there was the bird cage with dice instead of songsters, a device familiar to visitors of county fairs of the past—"the old army game." Parlor shooting matches may also be held, as complete galleries were exhibited, including those with sets of miniature soldiers which serve as moving targets. There were also pistols and guns, which shoot special copper-covered bullets, and they occasioned the statement that shooting ashes from cigarettes is now a popular pastime among debbs of the Middle West. That statement is not given as fact since I have been unable to verify it.

Another thing that struck my eye was a riding horse. It wasn't the hobbyhorse of old days, but a big thing on heavy springs. Those springs are pulled down and released when the rider gets aboard. Thus there is the effect of a bucking bronch without having to travel to a dude ranch.

The majority of exhibits at the toy fair this year as usual, were of American manufacture though some foreign countries were represented. Among them was Russia. Most of the toys shown from there were peasant products. A number of foreigners attended the fair for the first time because anti-Nazi feeling caused a prejudice against German toys in some localities. Incidentally, the American toy business in the last 14 years has increased from $50,000,000 to $200,000,000 annually.

Just as an afterthought: Adults who buy toys for themselves or for kids this coming Christmas time will pay from 20 to 40 per cent more than they did last year.

Reports a scout: Sauntering along Fifth avenue was a perfect example of how a well-dressed young man should appear—morning coat, top hat, yellow gloves, white spats, malacca cane, etc. At Forty-sixth street a taxi driver made a quick right turn through a puddle and grinned with joy as he spattered the fashion model. But at Madison avenue, a red light stopped the taxi and before it changed, the well-dressed young man arrived, jerked the driver from his seat, socked him twice and threw him back into the cab. Then he picked up his cane, walked over to the avenue and resumed his saunter. And not even his gardenia was disarranged!

Women drinkers who in the past haven't done much meddling with cocktails, other than the fruit or oyster variety, have brought a new problem to certain popular-priced eating places. So one chain has provided rest rooms where the effects may be allowed to wear off.

To Clear Smoky Rooms

Smoky rooms can be cleaned if a few drops of vinegar are placed on a hot shovel and allowed to burn. Another way is to take out a small red-hot cinder, place it on a shovel, and pour a few drops of vinegar on it. The same process is excellent in a sick room, using eau de cologne or other perfumes instead of vinegar.

Electric Cords

Cords of electric irons, toasters, and waffle irons should wear indefinitely if they are pulled out by the plug instead of by the wire itself, and hung up instead of twisted together and pushed into a drawer.

Grease Spots

Grease spots on silk may be removed by covering the soiled parts with french chalk. Let stand for a few hours, then brush off. Repeat the application if necessary.

Many Caves

A survey of the Modoc lava beds national monument in northern California disclosed more than 224 caves measuring from 10 to 100 feet in diameter.

French Physician Sees Sun Bath as Dangerous

The sun-bath craze is overdone, asserts a French physician.

At its best, he says, it was founded upon a misconception. At its worst it causes the weak to become weaker and the well to run serious risks.

Young and old alike should be cautious in taking sun baths, says Dr. Charles Fleissinger, from whose study in Candide (Paris) these points are taken:

"To begin with, one should think of one's age. After sixty there should be an end of the folly of exposing one's skin to the sun cult.

"Doubtless, a man of sixty does not think he is old. . . .

"If the arteries no longer are endowed with juvenile elasticity what risks are run of congestions, not to mention various infections!

"Even among the young, accidents result from sun exposures. A young girl, taking her sun bath, was smitten with endocarditis and caught a fever.

"The functions of the skin capillaries are interfered with by the stimulation due to extreme light. Those subject to heart difficulties, and all who are likely to feel the effect of overstrain, run another risk. The work of the heart is made heavier and a tendency to tension is intensified.

"This great tension is sometimes misunderstood by its victim. He who has passed middle age would do well, before taking a sun bath, to consult a physician.

"Those whose kidneys are not in the best shape should also be cautious. Skin exhalation is often checked by the drying process of a sun bath.

"Poisons eliminated through the skin will thus seek an outlet by other routes. They will go to the kidneys, thus imposing greater labor upon an organ which may be overworked as it is.

"Some tuberculosis subjects have hoped for an improvement in their state by means of sun baths. They would be wiser if they did not pin their hopes to this expedient. There are too many complications to fear. The same holds good for the asthmatic.

"The mudist craze may entail a series of crises in health that will continue hopelessly.

"Those suffering from skin affections of various kinds must also be on their guard against sun rays. Victims of eczema especially should avoid sun baths."—Literary Digest.

Last Spot of French Ground Napoleon Trod

The little island of Aix, lying in the Bay of Biscay about two miles off the French coast averages only a mile across, and a good part of that is taken up by forts and fortifications.

The island's chief claim to attention is the fact that it was the last bit of French ground trod by Napoleon before he went into exile at St. Helena. On his flight from Paris in 1815 the emperor went to Rochefort, hoping for a ship which might carry him to some refuge, possibly to America.

With his few followers Napoleon crossed over to Aix. The plans for escape continued, but soon the path to the sea was blocked by the English cruiser Bellerophon. Unwisely the emperor decided "to throw himself on the hospitality of the British people." A letter to the prince regent of England was handed to the captain of the Bellerophon and on July 15 Napoleon went on board the cruiser. A few moments later he was on his way to St. Helena.

The home in which Napoleon stayed while on Aix is still standing.

TELL WORLD OF OLD-AGE SECRET

Three Essentials Named by Physicians.

"Our hospital records and the doctors' case files are bursting with information regarding the frailties and disintegration of old age, but only the life insurance records contain any great amount of reliable information regarding the normal conditions in extreme old age."

Thus Drs. Francis G. Benedict and Howard F. Root of the nutrition laboratory of the Carnegie Institution in Washington introduced before the National academy a study of old age which they have made on the person of ninety-one-year-old Seth W. Lincoln of Worcester, a typesetter whose body and mind may well be envied by men half his age. Lincoln was tested just as if he were a piece of machinery.

The specialty of Doctors Benedict and Root is metabolism—the conversion of food into tissue and energy. They measured Lincoln's basal metabolism, that is, his heat production, on an empty stomach in the morning while he was lying quietly. It was so low as to indicate senile debility and extreme muscular weakness. But Lincoln's quick movements, his active life, his strength belied any such conclusion. So Doctors Benedict and Root decided that "this man's body machine is working with extraordinary efficiency, and that when it is not performing muscular work it assembles an automobile engine while idling."

That this is probably the correct view is indicated by a comparison of Seth Lincoln with Sir James Crichton-Browne (eighty-nine) and the late Dr. W. W. Keen of Philadelphia, who died at ninety-five. Their oxygen consumption—which is what is actually measured in a basal metabolism test—was also low though not quite so low as that of Lincoln.

The secret of Lincoln's longevity seems to be his ease of mind. He has passed through life untroubled by financial stress or great sorrow. This in the opinion of Doctors Benedict and Root "has relieved him of much of the excess tension and nerve-racking wearing strain that come all through life to so many of our intense American business men."

How, then, is long life to be attained? The essentials are sound ancestors, temperate habits of life and freedom from worry.—New York Herald Tribune.

THIS WEEK IN WASHINGTON

BY MICHAEL K. REILLY: M. C.

Since my last letter the House passed the Deficiency Appropriations Bill for 1934 and 1935 and a Bill known as the Grain Futures Act, which applies to the produce markets of the country, the same Government regulations as are contained in the Stock Exchange Bill, recently passed by Congress.

The House also passed a bill to take a census of the unemployed in this country. This bill has two purposes, one is to get some definite information as regards the number of people who are really out of work and the other is to furnish some more relief to what might be called the white-collared unemployed brigade. This bill receives an appropriation of about $5,000,000,000. Some relief was given to the same class of our unemployed citizens when a real property census of the country was taken several months ago. A year ago it was estimated that there were thirteen million people out of work in this country, and reports now are to the effect that between four and five million people have been put to work. There are however, authorities more or less reliable, who say that we have ten million people out of work today.

Mr. Hopkins, Administrator of Federal Relief, and through whose hands pass the huge sums voted by Congress to feed the unemployed is very anxious to know definitely how many people are unemployed in this country, that is people who want to work, or were employed prior to the beginning of the panic in 1929.

It is absolutely essential to any successful working out of the plans for relief of the unemployed to have definite information as to just how large the problem is that is to be tackled. There is no question at all but that the unemployed situation is better today than it was a year ago, but if we have eight million still unemployed, there is still a long way yet to go before we will reach the period of normal unemployment in this country. I say normal unemployment because in the prosperous days prior to 1929 we had about three million people unemployed in this country. Our different relief agencies can easily take care of three million unemployed in this country. It is stated by those who claim to know something about the unemployment situation that a large part of the three million unemployed before the breaking of the panic did not want work and would not take a job if it was offered to them.

Of course, one need not worry about the man or woman who does not want to work and who are much opposed to idleness and the acceptance of charity.

Every session of Congress in its closing days always passes a deficiency appropriation bill. This bill is intended to provide funds for Bureaus that have exceeded their annual appropriation and also to provide for emergencies such as we have at the present time. Ordinary emergency appropriation bills all put together do not amount to more than several hundred million dollars but the deficiency appropriation bill passed this week by the House carries about 1800 million dollars, the large part of which is to go to cover expenditures for relief. This relief burden has been accentuated by the drought situation.

Much of the time this past week, the House has been engaged in considering bill on the Consent Calendar with the result that many Members who have pet measures of local importance only, have had an opportunity to bring the various bills up for consideration before the House.

The Senate on Monday of this week passed the so-called Reciprocity Tariff Bill. This bill was passed in the House in about one week. It took them three weeks for it to get through the Senate. The passage of this bill represents the difference between the progress of legislation in the House and in the Senate. The House has rules whereby debate on bills is controlled or limited while the Senate has no rules controlling debate on a bill unless it becomes manifest that the debate is nothing more than a filibuster. Then, the Senate has a rule whereby the Senators by a majority vote may declare that a filibuster is on, and after such vote is taken, the debate is limited to one hour for each Senator.

Critics of the legislative procedure in the Senate and the House, or some of them at least, maintain that the debate is too limited in the House and too extensive in the Senate.

The writer is of the opinion that a debate seldom if ever, affects the passage of legislation in the House. In all of my Congressional experience I only remember of one speech that in my judgment changed a single vote.

The real legislative work in Congress is done by Committees and the average Member of the House must of necessity, follow the Committee's judgment on legislation, and as a general proposition such being the case, long speeches on the floor of the House, unless made by men who know what they are talking about are a useless waste of time and money, time of the Members of the House, and money of the Government, in printing such speeches.

When a member of the House takes the floor to make a speech and has something to say in the way of information regarding the pending legislation, he receives very good attention, but on the other hand when a member of the House without any particular

FIREWORKS

Section 340.70, R. S., of Wisconsin regulates the sale, storage, use and display of fireworks.

1. TIME LIMIT—Fireworks may be sold at retail and used only during the period of June 27 to July 4, inclusive, except when July 4 falls on Sunday they may also be sold and used on July 5.

2. PERMISSIBLE WITHOUT RESTRICTION—Firecrackers not over two inches long and three-eighths inch in diameter, outside measurement, uncolored sparklers not over ten inches long and three-sixteenths inch in diameter, colored fire, torches, fountains and flower pots of prescribed kind, size and packing.

3. NOT PERMISSIBLE—Balloons, mortars, cannons, toy pistols, toy revolvers, explosive canes or other contrivance using explosive caps, firecrackers except those mentioned in 2 and any fireworks containing mercury or yellow phosphorus.

4. OTHER FIREWORKS—Sold, used and displayed under permit from mayor, village president or town chairman, who may require a bond to indemnify persons injured by fireworks.

Fireworks must not be stored, kept, sold or discharged where gasoline is handled.

Selling fireworks to anyone not having a valid permit makes the seller liable for all damages.

Parents knowingly permitting their minor children to buy, have in possession, or discharge fireworks are liable for all damages.

5. Mayors, village presidents, town chairmen, policemen, constables, firemen and all other peace officers are charged with the duty of enforcing the fireworks law, under penalty of removal from office. The Industrial Commission is the enforcing state body.

6. Each day's violation involves a penalty of from ten to five hundred dollars, or jail sentence of from thirty days to six months.

7. Penalties prescribed (6) may be recovered by the state in an action for debt.

SUPREME COURT DECISION—In Pizzo vs. Wieman, 149 Wisconsin 235, it is held that both wholesalers and retailers are liable for injuries and damage due to illegal fireworks. This decision has been followed in later court cases.

A strict enforcement of this law will save life, limb, eyesight and sound body of children and prevent marks, scars and disfigurement. This has been the price we have paid each year for our love of noise, excitement, show and display not to mention the many fires. An enlightened state must stop these needless sacrifices.

Civic bodies should plan for picnics, pageants, parades, games, sports and other outdoor amusements and exercises, and displays of legal fireworks by adults in open fields or parks, or on banks of rivers, lakes or ponds where fireworks are not liable to set fire to buildings.

Let us have a SAFE AND SANE FOURTH.

knowledge regarding the bill before the House, gets up and feels impelled to make a speech for home consumption, he has great difficulty in hearing himself talk, because of the inattention of the Members, who are on to his motives, in making that speech.

Of course, as a general proposition the Members of the Senate are much older from the stand-point of legislative experience and training than the members of the House and consequently it would be expected that the Senators would have more worth while thoughts to give expression to on pending legislation, than the younger members of the House. Whether it is a fact or not, that the Senators have such worth while thoughts, the record shows that the 96 United States Senators are doing more talking on legislation in the Senate, than the 435 Members of the House put together.

Conference reports are the order of the day now in both Houses. These reports come about because of a disagreement between the House as to legislation. The Senate will pass a bill upon some subject and the House will amend it or vice versa, and then when the bill gets back to the mother house, so to speak, if the amendment is objectionable, a conference is asked for. The conferees are made up of the ranking members, Democratic and Republican, of the committees of both Houses having in charge this particular legislation. Generally, the Committee is made up of three Democrats and two Republicans from each House. The most important conference report agreed to during the present week was the report pertaining to the extension of the temporary guaranty feature of the Bank Insurance Deposit Act for one year from July 1, and also, providing for the pay-off of depositors in closed banks to the amount of the reasonable worth of their assets of the bank at the present time.

This bill was in conference for many days and the conferees finally came together on a bill that was substantially like the bill passed by the House.

As set forth in one of my recent letters, beginning July 1, next, bank depositors will be insured 100 per cent up to $5000.00 and in a short time the Government will begin either buying or loaning money on the assets of closed National and State Banks to the amount of what said assets are reasonably worth. This provision of the new law is expected to enable millions of bank depositors throughout the country to receive about one billion dollars, at this time or within the very near future.
