KEWASKUM EAGERLY AWAITING ARRIVAL OF SANTA SATURDAY

The village of Kewaskum is all set to entertain a huge throng of kiddies and grownups this Saturday morning, Dec. 10, who will come to see Santa Claus drop out of the clouds into our midst at approximately 10 a. m. Santa will arrive by plane and make a sensational drop from the sky with a parachute. Thousands of people from this vicinity and many miles around will be here to witness the big event, never before attempted in this section of the state. This gala event is way beyond compare with any of the ordinary appearances made by Santa in other towns heretofore, and is worth coming many miles to see.

The plane will arrive over Kewaskum with its huge "jrens" screaming and after circling the town for 10 minutes or more, will drop Santa to the ground in a parachute. The plane will continue on its way while Santa, who will land just outside the village limits, will be rushed into the main business section of Kewaskum on the local fire truck. The truck will be accompanied into the business heart of town by an escort of several traffic policemen from Kewaskum and West Bend, as well as by the Kewaskum Community band.

The parade will move straight to the large community Christmas tree on the street directly in front of the village hall, which is adorned with hundreds of colored lights. Last week it was announced that Santa would stop on the vacant lot next to the Bank of Kewaskum but since that time the site has been changed to the village hall.

Here Santa will meet the thousands of kiddies and grownups and each child will receive a large bag of candy and nuts from the good old Saint. Thousands of these bags will be handed out free. Following this Santa will mingle with the throngs in the business district and will make the rounds to the local business houses, accompanied by the kiddies.

All the while Santa is in town the band will furnish music and there will be more entertainment and enjoyment than ever for all. The parachute used by Santa will be on display for all present. Santa may be early so be sure and get here early, get your car parked and don't miss a single thing.

And remember, movies of the jump, the parade, the crowds, and of everything that goes on will be taken by the Cem Theatre Circuit, which conducts the movies in Kewaskum every Sunday night. These movies taken will then be shown on Sunday, Dec. 18, as a special feature at the show here. Here is your chance to get into the movies and then see your own picture on the screen.

The businessmen of Kewaskum are responsible for bringing this great event to town to usher in the Christmas season. They have their places of business beautifully decorated for the season and have large stocks of holiday merchandise on display for your needs. Make Kewaskum your shopping center.

A list of the merchants sponsoring the event was published in last week's issue of the Statesman. Names of additional ones contributing, who were not approached by the time we went to press last week, appear on the back page of today's issue.

Eugene Fenske Takes Esther Dogs as Bride

The marriage of Miss Esther Frances Dogs, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Dogs of the town of Wayne, Route 3, Kewaskum, and Eugene Fenske, son of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Fenske of Arpin, Wis., was solemnized by Rev. A. A. Graf, pastor of the Salem Reformed church of Wayne, at the home of the bride's parents, Saturday, Dec. 3, at 2:00 p. m.

Mrs. Wilhelmine Bruhn, sister of the bride, was matron of honor and Wilhelmine Bruhn of this village, brother-in-law of the bride, was best man. Little Florence Dogs, niece of the bride, was flower girl, and Norman Dogs, nephew of the bride, was ring bearer. The bride was given in marriage by her brother, Norbert Dogs.

The bride was attired in a dress of teal blue satin and carried crepe and wore a corsage of chrysanthemums, mums and baby's breath. Her matron of honor wore a wine colored dress and a corsage similar to that of the bride. The flower girl's dress also was of wine color, with white accessories, and she carried a coronet of flowers similar to that of the bride. The ring bearer carried the rings in a calla lily.

After the ceremony a 5 o'clock dinner was served to the immediate families at the Republican hotel in Kewaskum and in the evening 25 guests were entertained at the home of the bride's parents.

MARRIAGE OF HUGO SIMON
TO MISS MARGARET ZANGL
In a wedding service, solemnized at 3 a. m. Saturday, Nov. 26th, in St. Andrews church at LeRoy, by the Rev. Henry C. Staehling, Miss Margaret Zangl, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Zangl of this village, and Hugo Simon, son of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Simon of near Allenton, were married. The bridegroom is well known here as the Simons are former residents of the village of Kewaskum, having moved to Allenton slightly more than a year ago.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was attired in a white satin dress trimmed with lace and a long tulle lace trimmed veil held with a coronet of lilies of the valley. She carried a shower of roses and white chrysanthemums.

Miss Lorraine Zangl, attending her sister as maid of honor, wore a floor length peach blue satin gown and bolero and a shoulder length veil held with a coronet of flowers. She carried yellow and white chrysanthemums.

Miss Madeline Simon, a sister of the bridegroom, was the bridesmaid. She was attired in a rose pink tulle frock and bolero jacket and a veil held with gold flowers and carried pink carnations and white pompons.

Kewaskum Nosed Out in Overtime Battle

The Kewaskum basketball team opened its 1938-39 season in the Land o' Lakes league last Sunday evening in the local gym by losing a thrilling, one point overtime battle to the visiting Ozaukee Musics of Port Washington. The final score was 35 to 34, after the extra five minute period had ended. A good crowd was in attendance.

Although going down in defeat to the flashy Musics, Kewaskum showed a lot of offensive and defensive power at times during the game and proved that they will be contenders this season. However, very noticeable in Sunday's game was Kewaskum's lack of aggressiveness on rebounds, especially under their own basket, which gave the Musics possession of the ball more frequently than they should have had, was costly during the overtime period when possessing the ball meant so much. The only exception was Marx, who was in the thick of the struggle from start to finish.

The locals got the jump on the visitors at the start and at the end of the first quarter, in which the play belonged mainly to Kewaskum, the boys took a 7 to 1 advantage. The Musics got the feel of things in the second period, in which the two teams played on even terms, each scoring eight points. At the half Kewaskum was still 6 points ahead with the score being 15 to 9.

At the start of the second half Buivid was substituted into the game for Stevens and the Port five clicked. While Kewaskum was scoring nine points their opponents showed a flash of offensive ability, overcame the home team's lead, and scored 15 points to tie the game all up at the end of the quarter.

The final period was a thrilling fight that kept the fans howling as one team and then the other scored. After battling tooth and nail for the full ten minutes the teams found themselves no further than they were at the quarter because the contest was still tied up. The score at the end of the regulation time was 32 all.

After a brief rest the teams again went to battle in the five minute overtime. A free throw by Marx completed the local scoring while Port netted a basket and kept control of the ball enough to squeeze out a win.

Marx was in his old form and took high scoring honors with five goals and a pair of gift passes for 12 points. Right on his heels was Kewaskum's other old reliable, Stenschke, with 11. Buivid, who was out of the game nearly the entire first half, led the Musics with 10.

The lineup:
OZAUKEE MUSICS FG FT PF
Stevens, rf 2 0 1
Buivid, rf 5 0 1
Foster, lf 3 2 1

Red Cross Drive Now On For Christmas Articles

Mrs. E. L. Morgenroth, local chairman, wishes to announce that the Red Cross drive for articles to be given to the needy of the community for Christmas, is now on in the village.

Mrs. Morgenroth makes an appeal in behalf of the American Red Cross for gifts of clothing, household supplies, home furnishings and other articles for the needy and distressed families of this community at Christmas time who do not have the means of purchasing these many necessary items. Many of our residents possess discarded articles which, although having fulfilled their use to the owner, would bring great warmth, comfort and cheer to the less fortunate.

The Red Cross, through Mrs. Morgenroth, will greatly appreciate any articles you may give, no matter how large or small. If you have any articles to offer, simply notify Mrs. Morgenroth by Saturday, Dec. 17, on which day the Kewaskum Girl Scouts will call at your home to pick up whatever you have. People outside of the village are also asked to turn in any items they may have to local headquarters.

SECOND TEAM SWAMPS WAYNE
In the preliminary game the Kewaskum B or second team defeated the Wayne team in a complete rout, 66 to 13, in which the locals ended up 53 points ahead of Wayne. Kewaskum used 10 men on two teams and one combination worked just as good as the other as the boys wore themselves out taking the ball down the floor and making baskets. The score at the half was 27 to 5, Kewaskum. C. Werner scored 22 points alone for the locals.

THE LINEUPS:
Kewaskum—C. Werner, W. Werner, Frost and H. Bartelt, forwards; R. Marx and Bath, centers; Melius, Miller, Dorn and Weddig, guards.
Wayne—Amerling and Kudek, forwards; Wietor, center; Voim, Petri and Darmody, guards.

mean you never had it in black and white. You know what I'm trying to say."

"What else was there to believe?" Farwell persisted. "There never was anything else to believe. God forgave me, I hoped the man was dead. Now he comes out of the past."

"One of them things. That's all." "If there was any doubt," was the bitter retort, "why did that man hide himself all these years? Why did he not find me? Why? There is no answer. To anything in life."

Pink came nearer. He stood looking down at the crumpled figure.

"Domine," he began slowly. "I ain't very good at sayin' things. But ain't you sorta runnin' out on yourself tonight? And on the kid? You old man, you're a good one."

"I always let you handle the church end. But here's how all this hits me. If God's all you figure, why's He lettin' our kid sit in a crooked game? No, sir. The kid's a square shooter. You can't tell me no different. Dope it out for yourself."

Nine o'clock found the parsonage enveloped in silence.

Jonathan Farwell still lay across his bed where Mulgrew had left him several hours before. Exhausted by the storm that had swept his heart and brain, sleep at last had claimed the minister. Pink was in the living room where he had stretched himself on the couch to wait Dale's coming.

The chiming of the clock brought

him to his feet, staring and rubbing his eyes.

A distinct uneasiness possessed him when he realized that his watch had been kept in vain. Dale had not returned. Satisfied by the quiet overhead that Farwell must be resting, Pink stole softly to his kitchen to brew a pot of coffee.

As he swallowed a hasty breakfast he was formulating a plan of action. He had promised Miss Lee to find the kid.

He swore at the sound of the door bell. Muttering to himself, he hurried to answer it before his employer should be roused. It might be some word from the kid.

"Well?" was his ungracious greeting to the stranger on the porch.

"I would like to see Dr. Farwell, if I may."

Before Pink could frame a refusal, a voice spoke from within the hall.

"Just a moment, Pinckney. Who is it?"

Jonathan Farwell came slowly down the stairs and crossed to the front door.

"Good morning," he began calmly. "Did you wish to see me?"

"Yes, Farwell."

"Yes, Comin'."

Pink fell back reluctantly and allowed the visitor to enter. Eyed him uneasily as he walked into the parlor, followed by the minister.

The atmosphere of the front room was charged with sudden tenseness as the two men faced each other. The stranger broke the silence. He spoke bluntly.

"We have never met, Doctor Farwell."

"No. It was a colorless word. But I am not surprised to see you now."

"Then you know I'm Wade Kelsey."

The name had no sooner left the speaker's lips than the door leading to the dining room was closed abruptly. By an unseen hand. The unexpected sound recalled Farwell to the duties of host.

"Will you be seated?"

"Thank you. We can talk here?"

"If you feel it necessary."

"We are alone, I mean?"

Jonathan Farwell walked to the hall door. He closed it and came back to the nearest chair, dropping wearily to its cushioned seat. A few brief hours had aged him perceptibly. His shoulders sagged. The white face was pinched and drawn.

"Well, sir?"

"Perhaps this is more difficult than I realized." A slight hesitancy marked Kelsey's attempt. Sudden sympathy filled him. This man was suffering. He was ill. "Can you understand what brings me here?" he ventured. "I suppose you know that I have met Dale."

"He told me so. He is gone."

"Gone? I don't quite understand. Isn't he out at the university?"

"He came here. To tell me about you."

"Of course. He mentioned something of the sort. I will be glad to see him again."

"He is gone," Farwell insisted listlessly. "First, Elaine. Today, Dale. What would you do now? I am beyond hurt, I think."

"You're talking in riddles, man!" Kelsey eyed the other sharply.

"And there is no answer left." Farwell's black eyes fixed themselves on the engineer's puzzled face.

"I once supposed if ever I met you face to face, I would kill you. God changes us." There was a faint touch of wonder in the words.

"I think you had better explain that," Kelsey said it quietly enough, but a dull color crept into his cheeks. "I thought I might be of some help. You have enough to answer for, when it comes to that, Elaine might be here now, if you like."

"I'm sorry. I didn't mean to say that."

"Yes. She might have come here with you. To claim your son. It is too late. He is gone. I drove him away."

"In God's name, Farwell, what are you saying?"

Kelsey sprang to his feet. The lean face under the gray hair had gone as white as Farwell's own. His fists were thrust into his coat pockets, as if fearful his anger might get the best of him.

"That Dale is yours," was the measured reply. "I always have known."

Wade Kelsey took a backward step and sank helplessly into his chair. He but stared at Farwell.

"I sinned more deeply than I knew. I never told the boy. Always I was hoping—hoping. Then you came. I had to tell him. All."

"Wait!" Kelsey's voice was harsh. He swallowed before he could ask his question. "Are you trying to tell me that you think—that you dare believe I'm that boy's father?"

"Would you deny him a name now? It is all that you can give him. More than you did for her."

"If I did not believe you utterly mad..." A dangerous, unspoken cry into Kelsey's voice as he leaned forward. "As long as you have said that—Let me tell you something once and for all. I gave Elaine a love that could mean nothing to you. For you killed her."

"No. I loved her. Too well."

"And I tell you that you did. You broke her between your hands. She loved you so well she let you drive her out of your life. And now..."

He was on his feet again. "You sit there in your smug righteousness and smirch her name. Didn't it occur to you that Dale might be your son? That he is your son? Elaine's boy? You poor blind fool. And to think I have hated you all these years!"

Farwell slowly passed his hand over his mouth as if he had received a blow. His lips twitched, but no sound came. He peered up vacantly at his accuser.

"I am beginning to understand," Kelsey remarked quietly. "We must get to the bottom of this. Pull yourself together, man. Is there anything I can get you?"

Farwell shook his head.

"Then listen to me." He drew his chair closer and seated himself.

"This is no time to mince words. It means too much to that boy. To all of us. I can tell you some things you don't know. That is what brought me here."

The story of the opera took her back to a medieval world. In a few moments she was completely lost in its atmosphere, so much so that she failed to notice that the man seated at her right was sending admiring glances in her direction. When the curtain went up, he leaned over and spoke.

"I love this," he said simply.

"I do, too," Betty answered, with a little catch in her voice. It seemed incredible that he was speaking to her. He was really acting as if she belonged. By the time the curtain went up again they were calling each other Prince and Princess: taking the names of the two leading characters on the stage.

As the great drama moved to its close Betty tried to hurry away. She didn't want her Prince to find out what an impostor she was. But he had taken hold of her arm.

"Couldn't we go and have some coffee?" he suggested. "I know I'm a stranger to you, but—'tis Christmas—and..."

"I should say 'no,'" Betty told herself. "I should even tell him the truth about myself." Instead, she accompanied him to the coffee shop across the street. She couldn't deny herself this one hour of happiness. After it was over, well—Betty would not let her thoughts go further.

She almost forgot that she was playing a part as they sat together. They seemed to have so much in common. He had read widely—the type of books she liked; he took an interest in so many things she liked; seemed to be as romantic and visionary as herself. But he spoke no word to indicate that he wanted to see her again. She had been foolish to expect it.

Gloom enveloped the world for Betty next morning. As if to add to her humiliation and misery, a clogged-up drain was sending oozy brown water back into the sink. Her feet dragged across the floor as she answered the plumber's knock.

Then the world spun dizzily around her for a moment. A rush of joy, of wonder, lifted her heart. Her Prince was standing in the doorway, his evening clothes replaced by clean blue overalls.

"I-I thought you were—" he stammered.

"And I-I thought you were—" Betty gasped in answer.

When explanations were over, a make-believe Prince and Princess were wondering if Christmas wasn't the very nicest time for a wedding ceremony.

Her prince was standing in the doorway, his evening clothes replaced by clean blue overalls.

strung across the streets. She told herself it must be the Christmas feeling in the air that made her do this daring thing. It was utterly ridiculous to dress up like a great lady, but one had to be different at Christmas. And life had been pretty dull for Betty since she had accepted the work she was doing. It offered very little inspiration.

Gloom enveloped the world for Betty next morning. As if to add to her humiliation and misery, a clogged-up drain was sending oozy brown water back into the sink. Her feet dragged across the floor as she answered the plumber's knock.

Then the world spun dizzily around her for a moment. A rush of joy, of wonder, lifted her heart. Her Prince was standing in the doorway, his evening clothes replaced by clean blue overalls.

"We'll start with me. You'd best make up your mind to accept what I tell you. Is that understood?" said Kelsey.

A slight nod of the head was Farwell's reply.

"When you came to Middleton, I was a transient man with the old G. & C. Starting out, I was engaged to Elaine. There's no good going into that. She loved you more than she did me. But there is one thing you will have to believe. It didn't keep me from loving her. There never has been another woman in my life. From that day until this. If you can get that..."

Farwell sat motionless. Staring in mute pain at the other man.

"I don't want to be rough..." Kelsey seemed to find the going difficult. "I know now that Elaine never opened her lips to a soul. But I saw... Though I never talked with her after she sent me away, she was trying to mine herself to a job that was beyond her."

"I can guess what happened after you took her away. She found herself failing the job—and you. Fright and her nerves got the better of her. I could piece it all together. She clung to you and you gave her no help. Perhaps you couldn't. That's not for me to judge. All I know is that something snapped."

Farwell moistened his lips with the tip of his tongue. Sat watching. His face was expressionless.

"Elaine was in a pain when she left your home. Her physical condition had something to do with it, of course. When she was driven to take the step, she couldn't go back. She couldn't go to her mother, for fear you would find her."

"This will sound almost unbelievable. I can see now. It was fate. The same as my running across Dale last week. I was in Chicago on business. A friend and I dropped into a Loop restaurant for lunch. I saw Elaine waiting on tables. This is going to hurt. She was working to support your baby."

"I'll cut it short for both our sakes. Elaine didn't have much resistance. The lake air had been there, her mother where she belonged. Then I began a search for you. You seemed to have dropped from sight. I stumbled across your trail once in 1915. Elaine had been dead several months. She hoped for you to the last. Wanted to put Dale in your arms where he belonged. Now it's your turn to help. Where were you?"

"Overseas."

"We weren't in the war then."

"Canadians."

In The Glamour of Christmas

By Josephine Edelman

BETTY PRICE dabbed a spot of rouge on each cheek, touched the places lightly for a natural effect, then dipped in the perfume bottle and rubbed the back of her small ears.

Tilting back the blurred mirror, she surveyed herself critically. The effect seemed entirely satisfactory. Betty sighed ecstatically. "I look like a million dollars," she breathed. "I—I can almost convince myself that I am a great lady tonight."

Carefully her silver-slipped feet descended the narrow stairs. She must get away as quickly as possible. What would the unromantic Mr. and Mrs. James Barstow say if they saw the Cinderella of their kitchen arrayed in garments like these? Betty chuckled at the thought. They would think she had gone crazy if they found out that she had spent a whole month's salary to rent the things she was wearing, and to buy a ticket for the opera. "But they never will find out," she told herself, as she carefully closed the back door behind her.

At the corner, she waited for a cab. On the way down, she heard the voice of Christmas everywhere. She saw its symbols in shop windows; in arches of green and red

Her prince was standing in the doorway, his evening clothes replaced by clean blue overalls.

LADY, your muff! It will never do to forget your muff. Orders is orders if you go costumed this winter sans an intriguing muff—using the word "intriguing" advisedly for the cunning muffs being turned out this season are just as whimsical and cunning as can be.

(Not only are muffs decidedly "in" (nothing less than a riot of muffs) but designers are playing them up in every mood. Big muffs, little muffs, muffs of precious furs and muffs of precious fabrics, flowers or feathers, or "what have you." Some are flat and pillow-like, others round in modish barrel type, and others—well, you never can tell what will happen in the guise of a muff as matters are going this season.)

Take out the family album and copy grandma's favorite jacket-and-muff more likely than not it will be an exact counterpart of the cunning "set" pictured to the right in the accompanying illustration. This winsome little ermine jacket is worn over the new crinoline hoop-skirted gown such as we of this generation had heretofore regarded as belonging to the daguerreotype age but now at fashion's command we are accepting it as "latest style" with high enthusiasm. The jacket fits firm and snug at the waistline, its cut away in front and has huge buttons of the ermine. The adorable muff speaks for itself.

The costume to the left affirms the continued style prestige of the black-and-white costume theme. This perfect black-and-white frock is the sort that will supply you with the lift of assurance so necessary to poise as you take the speaker's platform at your club. Made of a synthetic fabric, this stunning international dress, shown in smart shops this season, has a high neckline accentuated by a touch of white, repeated in the bow of the patent leather belt. Unpressed pleats stitched down through the waistline and over the hips give desired skirt fullness that succeeds in retaining a slim line. Soft pleats achieve blouse fullness. Zippers finish off the shoulder and sleeve openings. Hatted in a smart Persian lamb chechia, milady carries a muff of matching fur to give smart accent to her appearance.

Appropos of the large muff versus tiny muff see the huge affair that gives distinction to the modish outfit pictured in the oval inset. The tiny collar of this handsome afternoon coat and the muff of generous proportions are of marten-dyed skunk. The big bow so conspicuously positioned on the muff is of the identical cloth that fashions the coat, the edges left casually frayed, which goes to show what unexpected and audacious whims the new muffs exploit. Fullness in the sleeves and gathers at the yoke line lend flattering softness to this afternoon coat made of star sapphire blue tweed. The wool dress underneath and the felt hat are bright plum. This startling combination of blue and plum is typical of the out-of-the-ordinary color alliances to be seen this season.

The purpose of the new muffs is not only to be useful but they must complement the costume in a decorative way. In creating these muffs designers are going as far as they please in evolving cunning and whimsical confections that delight the eye. Milliners are turning out charming hat and muff sets made of shirred velvet in luscious colorings. Your frock, your coat or your dress may be gravely conservative but with one of the gaily colorful muff-and-hat twosomes it is transformed into an animated ensemble warranted to brighten the dullest winter landscape.

There is a tendency toward bigger buttons.

There are few changes in line to report in lingerie styles.

"Wear a plaid for evening" is Molyneux's daring suggestion.

Femininity, variety and versatility are three big news points.

A very new note in millinery is se postillion hat with its very high crown and moderately curled brim.

The newest theme in the development of plaid costumes concerns bias lines.

Dainty yellow china buttons make a delightful contrast for a deep pink wool dress.

Accessory gadgets are so plentiful that a thrifty woman can take one simple black frock and transform it into several glamorous costumes.

Some of the stores are selling suedeskins in the fashionable new colors. Which is good news for the woman who knows how to sew, for it offers infinite possibilities to "make your own" little boleros, and to "doll up" your felt hat with a matching suede band or motif. If you are clever enough you can even make a zippered handbag of matching suede.

Save the scraps and cut out decorative leaves or florals to applique on the cloth dress that "needs something" to give it chic. A suede vestie will give your tweed suit a new lease on life. There is no limit to the style flourishes you can give to your costume if you have the knack of sewing backed with "ideas" in design.

Many business girls who used to regard velvet frocks as luxuries are now choosing them for evening engagements in the lustrous and supple or dull mat weaves processed to resist crushing.

Chapeaux for Juniors

Important designers please style-conscious little girls with clever new bonnets as smartly designed as those created for mother.

There is a gown that is sure to strike the fancy at first sight. A foundational dress of handsome black crepe takes on color accent in the way of a softly-shirred and draped panel of silk jersey in the new magenta red tones. Note how effectively the panel is draped through the neckline, falling full length at one side of the front. Another significant style feature is the new base-of-throat neckline. The bracelet sleeves are smart.

mean you never had it in black and white. You know what I'm trying to say."

"What else was there to believe?" Farwell persisted. "There never was anything else to believe. God forgave me, I hoped the man was dead. Now he comes out of the past."

"One of them things. That's all." "If there was any doubt," was the bitter retort, "why did that man hide himself all these years? Why did he not find me? Why? There is no answer. To anything in life."

Pink came nearer. He stood looking down at the crumpled figure.

"Domine," he began slowly. "I ain't very good at sayin' things. But ain't you sorta runnin' out on yourself tonight? And on the kid? You old man, you're a good one."

"I always let you handle the church end. But here's how all this hits me. If God's all you figure, why's He lettin' our kid sit in a crooked game? No, sir. The kid's a square shooter. You can't tell me no different. Dope it out for yourself."

Nine o'clock found the parsonage enveloped in silence.

Jonathan Farwell still lay across his bed where Mulgrew had left him several hours before. Exhausted by the storm that had swept his heart and brain, sleep at last had claimed the minister. Pink was in the living room where he had stretched himself on the couch to wait Dale's coming.

The chiming of the clock brought him to his feet, staring and rubbing his eyes.

A distinct uneasiness possessed him when he realized that his watch had been kept in vain. Dale had not returned. Satisfied by the quiet overhead that Farwell must be resting, Pink stole softly to his kitchen to brew a pot of coffee.

As he swallowed a hasty breakfast he was formulating a plan of action. He had promised Miss Lee to find the kid.

He swore at the sound of the door bell. Muttering to himself, he hurried to answer it before his employer should be roused. It might be some word from the kid.

"Well?" was his ungracious greeting to the stranger on the porch.

"I would like to see Dr. Farwell, if I may."

Before Pink could frame a refusal, a voice spoke from within the hall.

"Just a moment, Pinckney. Who is it?"

Jonathan Farwell came slowly down the stairs and crossed to the front door.

"Good morning," he began calmly. "Did you wish to see me?"

"Yes, Farwell."

"Yes, Comin'."

Pink fell back reluctantly and allowed the visitor to enter. Eyed him uneasily as he walked into the parlor, followed by the minister.

The atmosphere of the front room was charged with sudden tenseness as the two men faced each other. The stranger broke the silence. He spoke bluntly.

"We have never met, Doctor Farwell."

"No. It was a colorless word. But I am not surprised to see you now."

"Then you know I'm Wade Kelsey."

The name had no sooner left the speaker's lips than the door leading to the dining room was closed abruptly. By an unseen hand. The unexpected sound recalled Farwell to the duties of host.

"Will you be seated?"

"Thank you. We can talk here?"

"If you feel it necessary."

"We are alone, I mean?"

Jonathan Farwell walked to the hall door. He closed it and came back to the nearest chair, dropping wearily to its cushioned seat. A few brief hours had aged him perceptibly. His shoulders sagged. The white face was pinched and drawn.

"Well, sir?"

"Perhaps this is more difficult than I realized." A slight hesitancy marked Kelsey's attempt. Sudden sympathy filled him. This man was suffering. He was ill. "Can you understand what brings me here?" he ventured. "I suppose you know that I have met Dale."

"He told me so. He is gone."

"Gone? I don't quite understand. Isn't he out at the university?"

"He came here. To tell me about you."

"Of course. He mentioned something of the sort. I will be glad to see him again."

"He is gone," Farwell insisted listlessly. "First, Elaine. Today, Dale. What would you do now? I am beyond hurt, I think."

"You're talking in riddles, man!" Kelsey eyed the other sharply.

Species of wildlife which are particularly benefited by roadside cover include such game birds as quail, pheasant and Hungarian partridge and nearly all the songbirds except those few species which nest only in dense wood. Among the songbirds which are almost entirely confined to roadsides and fence rows are indigo bunting, vesper sparrow, shrike, brown thrasher, and catbird.

YOUR WAR
"Keep the fifth man alive!"
That is the slogan which is now being employed in a drive to reduce the normally heavy winter automobile accident toll by at least 20 per cent.
If the United States can keep up the pace set in the first ten months of the year, the 1938 death toll will be 8,000 less than 1937's. We are in the midst of the crucial period now. December is always a bad month. And, looking into next year, January, February and March, with snow, ice and short days, constitute a period of maximum hazard.
The organized safety movement has reached a high point of efficiency. The technique of accident reduction has been amazingly perfected. Sporadic, desultory, localized safety campaigns have proven almost worthless. Instead, the safety education movement, supported by the casualty insurance industry through its National Conservation Bureau, state governments and numerous commercial and non-commercial groups, is attempting, with a high degree of success to reach every motorist every day.
Thus, the safety experts are doing all they can—and they are doing the biggest and best job in their history. The rest—and this is something you can't repeat too often—is up to the motorist and the pedestrian. The safety workers can offer you advice—but they can't open your ears and eyes if you insist on being deaf and blind. They can show you the road to safety—but they can't make you take it.
This war is your war. It is being fought to save your life, the lives of your friends and families, your property. Enlist in it now.

Motoring for pleasure, suggests a writer, is only for the rich. Yet there are lots of poor drivers on the road.

BIG PLAYTHINGS MADE LITTLE

This year's toys are miniature models of practical gadgets. Above: The "doctor" examines his ailing patient, fitted out with a miniature medico's bag that contains everything from a stethoscope to a make-believe M. D. degree.

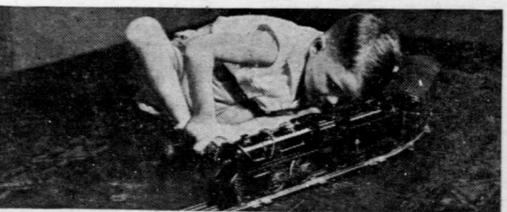

Model trains are complete in every detail, but it's Dad—not Junior—who usually monopolizes these intriguing gadgets. The above train is modeled faithfully to scale, operating on a track half the usual size to accommodate model train enthusiasts who live in cramped quarters. Toy trains are no longer for youngsters exclusively.

What's this? Even the trailer has entered toydom, along with streamlined automobiles in which Junior can drive down the sidewalk. The new model cars have door-grips, radiator caps and headlights, while the trailer is a boon to young men who want to take their girls for a ride.

This toy has a real practical value, because music lessons can be fun when a little girl learns on her own piano or foot-powered organ. Keyboard diagrams and real songs are provided.

England's Broadway a Village Broadway in America is but one street, but visitors who seek Broadway in England find that it is one of the loveliest villages of Warwickshire, and it also consists of but one street lined with houses centuries old and embowered in vines and flowers.

Troops in Spanish-American War Nearly 280,000 American troops were engaged in the Spanish-American war.

Razors Are Taxed Bearded Russians under Peter the Great wore metal receipts on their beards to signify that they had paid the beard tax. Beards lacking receipts were forcibly shaved off by the czar's order. In America the tax is on shaving. Every razor blade carries 45 hidden taxes to dull its edge.

Some Birds Light Sleepers Some birds sleep very lightly, and call constantly in the night.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

By LEMUEL F. PARTON

NEW YORK—The other day, a brisk, dapper little old man stepped into a big Wall street investment banking office and asked for the top boss, with an air of assurance. He had an audience and came out full of business and stepping high.

A friend, who was doing business there that day, reports to me that the peppy visitor was William G. Durant, twice head of General Motors, once the master of $100,000,000, and that, at the age of 77, Mr. Durant was scouting new capital for another big tourney in motor finance. My friend couldn't learn whether he got it, but said he had heard there was a deal on which might put Mr. Durant on the main line again. He said the little Napoleon of early day auto finance looked as if he were about to merge all companies and skim the cream.

It was in 1910 that the bankers crowded Mr. Durant out of the presidency of General Motors. He was back in 1915 and out again in 1920, in the post-war crash, in which he jettisoned $90,000,000 of his own money, trying to stop the downslide of the stock. He took his losses casually and was busy for years in daring market forays, but never quite converted any of his passes.

An acquaintance of this writer, who knew Mr. Durant well, told me how he laughed off his second relinquishment of his motors kingdom.

"I built the greatest automobile building in the world, at Detroit," he said, according to my informant, "and when I did it, I fixed it so they won't soon forget me. Hidden somewhere in every column and every capital and big stack of that building there is a deeply chiseled D. There wasn't anything anonymous about that job, and I took good care to leave my mark on it."

So did the king in Kipling's poem, when he was pulled off his big palace building job, when "They said they use is fulfilled." He "Carved on every timber and cut on every stone," and the poem concludes, "After me cometh a builder; tell him I, too, have known."

FOR several years, Dr. Karl T. Compton, president of Massachusetts Institute of Technology and one of the nation's greatest scientists, has explored the no man's land between an expanding government and an expanding technology. He thinks they ought to get together but he is no advocate of bureaucracy or extreme federalization. "I don't like the idea of the government getting on anybody's neck. He thinks the government, with its vast resources, might be an invaluable collaborator with science, and should be, in fact, but he advances this idea warily, as he finds creativeness and social progress in the old American free-for-all, without elaborate governmental trappings.

He never claimed an ivory tower, and sees the problem in its simple social components of jobs, a rising standard of living, social progress and security. He notes the job-killing potentialities of the machine, in certain individual instances, and assesses industrial management with finding a corrective.

This qualified admission is in sharp contrast to the view of Dr. Robert Andrews Millikan, another distinguished scientist who has wrestled with the same problem. Doctor Millikan is for throwing the throttle wide open, with the certainty that machines ultimately will make more jobs than they destroy. Both, however, prescribe a cure for our technological ills more of the hair of the dog that bit us. The difference in view is that Dr. Compton urges certain collective rationalizations and judicious self-imposed controls by industry and management.

For many years Dr. Compton has been blasting at the inner citadel of the atom to seize there the hidden golden key of unlimited power which has long been the "pie in the sky" of the great physicists. He batters down a rampart now and then, and, in the long view of the scientists, thinks that we may some day tap reservoirs of energy so vast that all our present ills will be easily soluble therein.

He has headed M. I. T. since 1930. Now rounding 50, he was head of the department of physics at Princeton before 1930, one of the most richly garlanded men of his profession in honors and records of achievement.

High Heels

HELLO EVERYBODY: This is a story about high heels, and horses, and about a fellow who had one foot in the stirrup and one foot in the grave. The guy is Lee Burgess of Toms River, N. J., and if any of you fellows think, like I used to, that high heels are no good for anybody but women, and not any too good for them, Lee will give you an argument on the subject. Lee knows at least one good reason for wearing high heels. And for men wearing them, at that.

When Lee was in his early twenties—and that was back in the fall of 1919—he spent a few months on a ranch near the little town of Walden, Colo. A city greenhorn, he was vastly impressed by the scenery, by the cattle business, and by the life he saw going on around him. "But most of all," he says, "did I admire the cow-punchers and the easy way they handled the spirited cow-ponies they rode. I fairly ached to emulate them."

Learned to Stick on a Horse's Back.

Lee says there's no finer, more generous or more open-hearted class of men than the cow-punchers. They gave him their friendship, and along with it all kinds of good advice on the handling of horses. They started him riding on safe docile ponies, and although he was quite awkward at it, he soon learned to stick on a horse's back well enough to go riding with the boys, rounding up strays, cutting out calves and doing the thousand and one odd jobs that man and horse have to do on a big ranch.

"As I progressed," says Lee, "I quite naturally changed from the slower, more patient ponies to faster, more highly organized animals. My seat improved, and with greater ease in the saddle my confidence in myself grew by leaps and bounds."

And quite often it's nothing more than a little too much confidence that leads you into one of those good old-fashioned hair-raising adventures.

"One bitterly cold day," says Lee, "when the air was as clear and sharp as thin glass, it was decided to move some 500 head of cattle from the home ranch down to the Old Ranch for winter feeding. I asked to be included in the crew and felt mighty proud when I was accepted by the foreman. With the temperature at forty below zero it was a job to keep warm. I dressed in heavy underwear, mackinaw, blanket pants, hair chaps, wool-lined coat, mittens and cap. It was all I could do to navigate in all this haberdashery. Having put on two pairs of heavy woolen socks, my feet were too large for the tight riding boots I usually wore, so I slipped on some big work shoes and buckled my spurs to them."

And that was an error that Lee nearly paid for with his life, for those shoes had flat heels, and not the high ones with which Western riding boots are generally equipped.

Horse Had Bad Disposition.

The horse Lee had chosen to ride was "Bill," a big, rangy buckskin, fast on his feet, but not noted for his good disposition. They rode over to the cattle corral and the boys led Lee at the gate ready to swing it open when the animals were bunched up for the drive. Sitting on his horse, he got colder and stiffer every minute he waited. Finally the herd was bunched and headed for the gate—big, heavy, Hereford cattle, lowing, bawling and making wild dashes hither and yon. "Hereford cattle," says Lee, "are peculiar. They will not attack a mounted man, but they are deadly to one afoot. I didn't know this, and since the gate was heavy and I was all bound up in excess clothing, I slipped off Bill to swing it open."

Felt as if his leg were being torn from its socket.

The next thing Lee knew he heard a yell from the foreman and looked up to see the herd almost on top of him. Someone yelled, "Get on that horse. Yuh want ta get killed?" And Lee moved plenty fast. He put his foot in the stirrup and swung himself on his horse, but because he was stiff and cold and hampered by a lot of excess clothing, his right foot didn't quite swing clear. Instead he gave Bill a rake across the hind-quarters with his spur, and Bill jumped. Lee lost his hold. The next minute he was on the ground, hanging by his left foot to the stirrup. His low heel had slipped through and his ankle was held in the bow as if he had had on a leg iron.

"Bill started to run," says Lee, "with the cattle pounding right on behind. My head was dragging at the horse's heels and his steel shoes actually stirred my hair. I knew that to put my arms over my head was to have them smashed. My only hope was to work my foot free and take my chances with the cattle. The horse ran faster and faster as he became more frightened at my weight dragging alongside. Contrary to reports, my sins did not troop before my mind at this time. All I thought of was to get my foot free, for my leg felt as if it were being dragged from its socket."

Could Feel Death Clutching at Him.

Lee says he could fairly feel Death reach out and clutch at him. One fate had him fast by the foot, dragging him to doom; another thought was sure to fall under the pounding hoofs of the other.

To right and left he could glimpse the legs of other horses about him, and knew his friends the cow-punchers were doing their best to save him. "But I knew, too," he says, "that help couldn't possibly come from them. The cattle seemed to have fallen away somewhere, but I still had to get loose from my horse. I kept tugging on my imprisoned foot, and suddenly there was a snap. The lace broke, my shoe came off and I was lying on the ground, quiet, motionless. Believe me, for a moment I was the most comfortable man in the world."

"The boys were around me, helping me up. I'll never forget the foreman, a young man with a fair skin, for the freckles stood out on his paper-white face like legal sea on a state document. They carried me to the ranch house, and when the reaction set in I was a pretty sick boy for a while. The foreman told me he never expected to see me come out alive."

And that brings us around to Lee's argument about high heels. You see, when they're on a puncher's boots, they're not for show, but to keep the foot from sliding through the stirrup and prevent just the sort of accident that almost had Lee up before the celestial bar of justice, cashing in his chips for a first payment on a harp.

Homemade dolls for collectors.

THIS Christmas it is not just the children who will receive dolls as gifts. Doll collecting is becoming a popular hobby for grown-ups. The most valued dolls are of whatever materials may be at hand and reflect the individuality of the person who made them. Rag babies of all kinds have an important place in such a collection. You will enjoy making the one shown here. Book 2 offered herewith also offers many suggestions for making and dressing dolls from scraps of materials.

If you want to make the stocking doll, clip these directions and keep them as this doll is not in either of the books offered here. The head and body are made of the foot of the stocking cut off where the heel begins, as shown. Stuff this part with cotton or bits of soft clean rags, sew across the bottom and then wind a thread around so that the toes of the stocking will form the head. Fold the leg and arm pieces lengthwise, stitch, turn and then stuff. Wrap thread around to make divisions for hands and feet. Sew the legs to the body, then add the skirt. The arms are sewn on top of the sweater piece and the sweater collar is turned down over this opening. NOTE: Mrs. Spears' Book 2—Gifts, Novelties and Embroidery, has helped thousands of women to use odds and ends of materials and their spare time to make things to sell and to use. Book 1—Sewing for the Home Decorator is full of inspiration for every homemaker. These books make delightful Christmas gifts. Mrs. Spears will autograph them on request. Craypatch quilt fabric is included for dolls every year for both books. Order by number, 25 cents each book. Address: Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill.

Lad H'ate the H'eats Without 'Eating H'eats

An English foreman in a certain factory is in the habit of getting an apprentice to heat his lunch for him. The other day he called a new boy.

"Go downstairs and 'eat up' my lunch for me," he ordered.

"The boy obeyed with alacrity. Later the foreman came down.

"Where's my lunch?" he asked.

"The boy, in amazement, said: "You said 'eat it up,' and I did it."

"I didn't tell you to 'eat it up,'" roared the irate foreman. "I told you to 'eat it up.'"

"Well, I didn't 'eat it up,'" maintained the lad, stoutly. "I ate it cold."

WHAT TO EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Discusses the Child Who Has a Lagging Appetite; Tells What to Do for the Finicky Eater

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

IT HAS been well said that with the knowledge of nutrition now at the command of practically every mother, there should not be one ill-nourished child in our land. Unfortunately, statistics show that possibly one-half of the children in this country are either underweight, undernourished or malnourished.

Many factors may be responsible for this state of affairs. Some children are fed incorrectly owing to the fact that the family income is small and the mother has not learned how to utilize low-cost foods that are rich in protective minerals and vitamins in place of those that are higher priced. In other families, the mothers do not realize the importance of providing a well-rounded diet for growing children. But the problems of these homemakers are more easily remedied, perhaps, than those of mothers who plan a well-balanced diet, but find that their child lacks interest in, or even refuses to eat the food that has been prepared so carefully.

Developing the Right Attitude
Strangely as it may seem, such difficulties often arise because a mother fails to give the necessary consideration to developing in the young child a proper attitude toward food. Some children need to be taught that they must eat enough food for their body requirements. It is part of the training they should have in early childhood, so that they develop a willingness to eat what is put before them, to try new foods when offered, and to become increasingly independent in making a wise selection at mealtimes.

If a child has been properly conditioned in these respects from his earliest years, mothers will seldom find themselves faced with a "child who will not eat."

Problem of Anorexia
All normal children will, at times, exhibit a lack of appetite. We are not concerned here with occasions when a child who usually eats well feels no desire for food. Such lack of appetite may mean the beginning of a cold or some other illness and should be carefully investigated. Unfortunately, however, many mothers of young children are faced with a chronic lack of appetite in their children—a condition that physicians describe as anorexia. In order to correct this condition, it is necessary to understand its causes and to use wisdom in helping to remove them.

Find the Causes
When a child chronically lacks interest in food, the mother should set about systematically to learn the reasons why. Possibly the cooperation of your physician will be required, for sometimes obscure physical causes may be responsible, such as faulty elimination, diseased tonsils or teeth or some other focal infection. On the other hand, it frequently occurs that a changed attitude on the part of the mother in presenting food is all that is necessary to alter completely a child's attitude in regard to his meals.

It is interesting to note, however, that in studying a large group of children with poor appetites, one investigator found that 82 per cent of the children were more than average in height and narrow in body build. Faulty Diet May Destroy Appetite
Frequently, a child's lack of interest in food may be traced directly to poor choice among the foods presented to him. It has been repeatedly demonstrated, for example, that when the diet lacks vitamin B, appetite decreases, so that there is less desire for food of any kind. Then, too, when a child's diet contains too much fat, digestion may be delayed and this in turn may interfere with the appetite for the next meal. While some children thrive better with a between-meal feeding, in others it seems to destroy appetite for the meal that is to follow. And with some children, "fussiness" at mealtimes may be due to the fact that their diet contains too many concentrated foods, too few crisp raw ones that stimulate appetite.

Fatigue a Factor
Occasionally, a child does not eat well merely because he is too tired. Even though he obtains adequate sleep at night, too much or too prolonged exercise or excitement may result in fatigue during the day. If a child spends too much time with adults, overstimulation may be the result. And in the case of older children, their school work may be troubling them.

Another frequent cause of lagging appetite is the constant nervous tension to be observed in some households. If a child is allowed to become unhappy, angry, or worried over some uncompleted school assignment, it may interfere seriously with his appetite and consequently with his nutrition. With younger children the fact that they are able to attract favorable attention from adults by refusing to eat often stimulates them to repeat their refusal as long as mother shows concern over their antics.

Parents' Attitude Important
This brings us to perhaps the most important factor in dealing with the young, finicky eater who eats sparingly and whose dislikes usually far outnumber his likes. Such a child must be encouraged tactfully to eat a wide variety of foods, but mothers must not be over-solicitous, nor must they be obviously angry or irritated when the child refuses food. Scolding, punishment and threats of punishment should be avoided.

as they defeat their purpose. Remember, too, that precept is a powerful teacher, and that a child's dislike for certain foods may have been instilled by a none-too-guardedly expressed dislike of a similar food on the part of an adult.

Some Helpful Hints
It may be necessary for the entire family to live more quietly, in order to give the finicky eater a chance to be quiet and relaxed. There must be regularity of meals and mealtimes must be peaceful. Keep the table conversation general and impersonal in character before older children. See to it that younger ones eat by themselves.

Often a short rest before meals will help a child to become relaxed completely. And frequently, a new method of presenting foods will result in a changed attitude on the part of the child.

Foods for young children should not be seasoned too highly. In general, condiments should be avoided. Strong-flavored vegetables, as a rule, are not well liked, and if introduced in the young child's diet should be combined with some familiar, and mild-tasting food. In cooking vegetables, keep the pieces large enough so that the child can identify what he is eating. Include a crisp food in each meal.

Finally, remember that a child's eating habits cannot be changed overnight. Changes should be introduced gradually, so that he is scarcely aware of what is going on.
